FUNERAL BUNCHES.

Roses.

The bunches illustrated this week contain the same roses (Bridesmaid and La France) that were used in the bunches of which pictures appeared in our issue of October 30.

The arrangement is somewhat different. Adiantum has been used in place of asparagus and less green for a foundation. No. 3 contains three dozen, and a side view is given to show the depth of the bunch, while No. 4 contains six dozen roses and the view is of the top. The smaller bunch is usually sold for $5 and the larger one for $10.

Adiantum is always pretty and dainty arranged with roses, and is very desirable when the bunch is to be delivered late, or but a few hours before the services, but where the arrangement must be delivered a considerable time in advance of the funeral the adiantum soon wilts and this injures the beauty of the bunch, making the flowers look wilted also. For this reason adiantum is probably less used than in former years.

CARNATION NOTES—WEST.

Notes on Varieties.

This week I redeem my promise to go over our list of varieties and comment on the merits and demerits of the various sorts as they are behaving on our place. You must bear in mind, however, that a variety often will do finely on one place and not at all well on another, perhaps not very far away.

Among the whites we are so well pleased with Queen Louise that we will likely make it our main white next season. The bloom is as good as that of White Cloud, and it is much earlier and freer and a much nicer grower. One of the most promising things we have come across lately.

Lorna is a greatly improved White Cloud with us and we shall grow it in place of White Cloud. The growth is better and the blooms come earlier and a little larger.

Norway was rather a disappointment last year and we have only a few this year. The plants were not so large and they lifted better this fall and have been doing much better in the house. Not so good, though, as the above two.

Flora Hill is still as much of a favorite as ever, and we could not do without it. There is nothing yet that will take its place during warm weather in spring and summer.

White Cloud is still fine, with many growers, but here it is not so good as Lorna, and it will have to give way.

Alba makes a fine bloom, pure white and large size, but it evidently wants early propagating to get quantity. We shall plant this in larger quantities next season and propagate it early.

Last spring we received 25 plants of Her Majesty for trial and we are well pleased with its behavior. The blooms are large and of fine form and pure white. The growth is vigorous and the stems are strong. We think very highly of this new variety and I miss my guess if it does not become a standard white.

In pink Ethel Crocker is still on top both in quantity and quality. It has done so well with us that we have made it our main stand-by. The blooms are right now selling for one-third more than those of any other variety on our place except some seedlings and our customers are glad to pay the difference. As a summer bloomer it cannot be beaten, as the blooms come almost as good in summer as they do in winter and the color is fine at all times. This variety is a good example of how a good variety may fail the first year or two. Not one grower in a dozen had any success with it the first year it was out, but we see and hear of more growers taking it up again right along and doing it nicely now that they know what it wants.

There is perhaps nothing in the carnation line that looks richer than a bunch of well grown Lawsons. It seems just about impossible to get a good long stem onto this variety before the middle of November, and of course the blooms cannot command as high a price while the stems are so short, as the same grade blooms will bring later on long stems.

Mrs. Nelson is behaving nicely and bids fair to become a standard variety. The growth is free and strong. The blooms are large and of good form and color and altogether it looks like a good one.

Dorothy is as free as anything we have ever seen and it is the earliest carnation we have. The blooms are of average size and on good stems. The color is rather deep, but it keeps well, and where quantity is wanted it is hard to beat. You should visit its home at Richmond if you want to see it done properly.

Mrs. Joost is still a favorite with us and a bench is filled with it. The color is good and it is very free and steady. The growth is upright and the stems are always strong. If you grow only one pink variety, this would likely prove the most satisfactory.

Floriana is proving to be a good thing. The color is good and the growth is free and strong. We consider it far superior to Marquis, which it resembles somewhat in color and form. In red we are growing both Crane and America in quantity and both are good. Crane is giving us large quantities now of fine blooms on long stems and we are well pleased with it. A standard scarlet. America has not come into full crop with us yet, and the stems are not so long as those of Crane, but it is so good by midwinter that we must have it.

Among the newer ones we like Apollo very much, indeed. You can hardly tell it from Crane, except that the color is much more brilliant. Does not perfect its bloom as early, though, with us.

Mrs. Potter Palmer does not seem to like warm weather, but is beginning to improve wonderfully and will likely prove a fine cold weather variety, as were both of its parents. The color is getting much better lately.

James Manley was so determined to bloom that he forgot to grow and our plants are not very promising. With a good start and proper handling this is likely to prove a red Dorothy.

Estelle is another variety that has failed to make good enough plants to make a good crop of blooms possible. If we could get the color of this one into Crane or America we would surely have a prize winner. Start it early if you want quantity.

We are growing a few plants of Roosevelt just for novelty, and there is nothing in its class to touch it except, perhaps, last spring's novelties. It is early and free and of good quality.

Stella is a fine variegated sort that seems to be giving entire satisfaction. The bloom is as large as Bradt and much prettier, we think. The growth is entirely different and it is as free as most varieties. A good one to grow in its class.

We received a few plants of Viola Allen mixed in our J. Manley stock, and they are doing finely. As a general thing we object to getting mixed stock, but in this case we are rather pleased, because we had not ordered any V. Allen. The blooms are large, of good form and on good stems. An A No.1 variegated sort.

In light pink we grow Elma and have discarded all others, because Elma gave us better blooms and more of them than any other. It is early and free and of fine quality with us. A little particular as to culture, but very grateful for a little extra care.

Seedlings? Well, yes, we have some, in fact quite a good many and some of them we value quite highly, but you will hear from them later on, when we have enough to disseminate them. They were not taken into consideration in making out the above list.

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.

New Introductions.

The buying of new varieties is not much of a lottery at the present time, thanks to the energy of our originators and introducers, who are taking advantage of every opportunity to display their aspirants at various exhibitions throughout the country. Couple with this the liberality of our trade papers and the work of the American Carnation Society, one need not go astray in the selection of additions or substitutions that may be in mind.

Early in the season I have been often asked how it was that this or that carnation scored so high when judged. My answer is this: If you will cultivate patience to a degree that will at all compare with the amount possessed by a hybridist, you will no doubt be rewarded with the information desired. In other words do not judge a variety too quickly. Some are naturally later than others and certainly it is not desirable to have all early or all late. Remember there are other days than Xmas, Easter, Memorial Day and holidays, so it is best to wait until a year's experience is had before forming an opinion.

In my notes of November 13 it occurs to me that perhaps my remarks concerning some varieties may be taken as criticism. Such, however, was not my purpose, my sole object being to state conditions then present. These fall exhibitions give the grower a chance to see the quality produced early in the season. A visit to the introducer's establishment during January would be of immense value, but being in many cases impossible, the trade papers must be thoroughly read. Cross examination of all knights of the grip (they are full of information even if not selling carnations) will be of great advantage.

With the average grower it is impossible to include all new varieties, but it is good policy to give those varieties a trial which promise to excel any of those your judgment tells you are falling behind. Buying 50 or 100 of a sort is almost money thrown away. One cannot expect many blooms from so few plants, while if grown for cuttings only there is danger of over-propagation together with a loss of knowledge as to blooming qualities, requirements and a host of other things necessary to success. Better to have waited another year when lower in price. Still better is to arrange for at least 500, contenting oneself, if need be, with fewer varieties. With 500 plants you can have sufficient bloom to place them properly before the public, who are the real critics after all; besides enough cuttings can be made for the next year.

Now a word to the disseminators: Would it not be to your advantage to give printed directions, drawn from your experience, with every shipment of cuttings, furnishing explicit information as to temperature, field culture, time to house, and treatment generally? I am pleased to note that this custom has begun and it is hoped that it will be enlarged upon, in the end becoming general. One important step, it is noticed, has been taken in the right direction, and that is the sending out of stock in January.

Geo. S. Osborn.

CARNATIONS—SMILAX.

Please tell me what ails the carnations of which I send some foliage, and the remedy for the trouble.

Will smilax stand tobacco fumigation?

Is it necessary to freeze Von Sion narcissus before forcing? J. C. B.

The carnation foliage you sent is about as full of red spider as it very well could be, and you surely must have been following the advice of one of these gentlemen who condemn the syringing of carnations after they begin to grow on the benches, or else you have been very negligent in caring for your plants.

If your water supply has a good force back of it you can rid your plants of the spider by syringing them hard from both sides two or three times each week for a few weeks, and then you can keep them clean by syringing them once each week through the season. Always choose a bright day for this work and do it as early in the day as you can, say between 8 and 11 o'clock, so the plants will have time to dry off before evening.

The other two questions really belong to my friend Scott, but he sometimes comes over into my carnation patch without any objections being raised, so I will answer them.

Tobacco smoke will not injure smilax unless the smoke is quite strong and you must also take into consideration that the young growth is frequently way up near the roof of the house and the smoke is very apt to be extra thick up there, so be careful in fumigating a smilax house, though it will stand as much as most plants.

Von Sion narcissus do not need to be frozen to force well. All you need is a good strong root growth before you begin to force them. If you want directions in detail regarding their culture just ask Brother Scott; he can give you directions in detail from the time you order the bulbs until you cut the blooms, but I can tell you that you need not freeze them. A. F. J. Baur.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

As a propagating medium, sand being in most districts easily obtained, is most universally used, although there are other materials which can be used with equal success.

Sharp, clean sand, whether obtained from lake, river or sandpit, if it contains nothing which can decompose and prevent the formation of roots, is good enough for all ordinary purposes, but as this contains in itself nothing nutritive for supporting plants the cuttings must be removed from it and potted just as soon as root formation has taken place, water being the only means of support until this condition is obtained. If the cuttings are allowed to remain longer in the sand the eyes will break but the growth must necessarily be weak.

Sifted coke, or fine charcoal can also be used with advantage for winter propagation, but in my experience I found it absorbed too much heat during warm weather to be of much use for spring or early summer work, such as chrysanthemum cuttings, etc.

The sand should be pounded until it is moderately firm, and left of a uniform depth of four or four and one-half inches, thoroughly watered, and brought to the temperature desired, 60 or 62 degrees being about the ideal. At the lower temperature it takes a few days longer to complete the root formation, but the cuttings are usually hardy and robust, and when potted start into work easily and grow rapidly. For Beauties, Meteors and Perles the higher temperature is best.

The temperature of the house should be ten degrees lower than that of the sand; this discourages the breaking of eyes and making of wood while root formation is in progress.

To obtain success in propagating the house requires the strictest care and attention in ventilating, watering, and the intelligent regulation of the heat conserved beneath the benches, as any carelessness or inattention in these matters can easily ruin a whole houseful of cuttings.

The selection of suitable wood, style of cutting, etc., will be treated in my next paper. RIBES.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

Review of Varieties.

The exhibitions are over, and in accordance with our usual custom we will review the field and see what varieties have proved themselves entitled to climb up the ladder of fame. Some of the varieties that are very prominent at exhibitions are not of much value to the commercial man, and if the recommendation of the C. S. A. to put in classes at exhibitions for supported flowers is generally carried out, the difference between varieties suitable for exhibiting and varieties suitable for commercial work will be even more pronounced.

Without going into the merits or demerits of that recommendation further than to say that I am in favor of it, I will give a list of about thirty varieties that I believe are the best that can be grown for exhibition purposes. I have gone to considerable trouble in compiling this list, and have been very careful in the selection because I happen to know that not a few exhibition growers read it, and govern themselves accordingly. The varieties are listed in the order of their flowering.

Yellows: C. J. Salter, Mrs. T. W. Pockett, Mabel Morgan, Yellow Carnot, Appleton, Mrs. Thurkell and Goldmine. Of these Salter and Pockett have been previously mentioned in these notes. Their only weak spot is that they are a trifle early for the bulk of the exhibitions. Appleton, Yellow Carnot and Goldmine are well known. I frankly confess that I cannot handle Goldmine, but it has been shown in splendid shape this year at several places and cannot be ignored. Mabel Morgan is a beautiful Japanese, rather light in color, but ideal in form and finish. Mrs. E. Thurkell is also a Japanese with long drooping florets, splendid color and as set up this year one of the very finest of all the yellows. I notice Mr. Smith makes a needed correction as to the proper name of this variety.

Whites: Nellie Pockett, Weeks, Carnot, Merza, Eaton, Florence Molyneux and Chadwick. There is only one in this list, Florence Molyneux, that is at all new. This variety is a trifle weak in the stem, but may overcome that defect. Merza has been shown finer than ever. Chadwick is really a poor white, owing to the pink shade that shows through it, but it is irreproachable in form and finish, and is late, which makes it useful for later shows. There is lots of room for several more good whites in this class. Convention Hall will be tried by some and may make a name for itself.

In pinks, Mrs. Coombes, Marie Liger, A. J. Balfour, V. Morel, Mrs. Barkley and R. E. Richardson seem about the best. Coombes is rather too early, but it is a fine keeper. Liger you have all seen at the different exhibitions. Balfour is small and shy on petalage, but that wonderful color often carries it through. Barkley was exhibited in New York in wonderful shape, and Richardson, while a shade small, is the most beautiful shade of pink perhaps of the whole lot. Columbia is spoken of as a pink for this class, but I have not seen it. Chamberlain was a disappointment to me as an exhibition pink, owing to its lack of petalage, though the color is beautiful.

In the purple class, as it may be called for want of a better term, or the class for any other color, I place Carrington, Millicent Richardson, Chas. Longley and Geo. Carpenter. Carrington has been exhibited very extensively this fall and invariably fine. Millicent Richardson and Longley have been spoken of in these notes before, the first named being much brighter than Carrington. Carpenter is dull in color and rather short in the petal and if one has the three first named he hardly needs the last one, though it is all right as a variety. Another variety that must go into this class of any other color, as it is not a good self color, is Lord Salisbury. This variety is yellow suffused with crimson, not a particularly taking color, but simply immense in size. It is a Japanese with petals 10 inches long. The petals drop right down and the real size of the flower is not seen unless it is set up on a board. Like most of the other big fellows today it comes from Australia.

In the crimson class, H. J. Jones is immense, though many growers this year took the bud too early, and the flower instead of being rich crimson came chestnut brown or some other off color, but from a bud taken the last of August, Jones will produce a beautiful flower. Lord Hopetoun, a new Australian, may crowd it close next year, as it is claimed to be brighter in color than Jones and a better grower.

In the bronze section Broomhead seems to be the only thing, though wonderful flowers of Rustique were shown at Lenox, I am told. It seems to me that W. R. Church will have to go into this section. It is catalogued as a rosy crimson with bronze reverse, but it only shows the bronze reverse. I note some remarks in an English paper about over-dressing a flower of Church, that is, of turning the petals inside out and making a reflexed out of an incurving variety. In America a dressed flower is barred out from competition, therefore I see no place for Church but as an incurving bronze.

The Australian Varieties.

Nothing is more remarkable in looking over this list than to note the fact that at least one-third are Australian raised varieties. They include Nellie Pockett, Mabel Morgan, C. J. Salter, Mrs. T. W. Pockett, Lord Hopetoun, Charles Longley, Millicent Richardson, George Carpenter, Lord Salisbury, W. R. Church, T. Carrington and Mrs. Thurkell.

In addition to these there are several others that may be heard from next year. These include Lady Hopetoun, a cream color; Colonel Rowell, yellow; Daisy Moore, pink; Mrs. Emerton, yellow; and I don't know how many more dark horses. It is a wonderful record and one of which the Australians may well be proud. In saying this I make no reflection on our own raisers, who have been working of late years more particularly on commercial lines. This may in the future be changed if the exhibition schedules are broadened. Quite a few of the Australian varieties are only good for exhibiting, but that seems to have been what the raisers were working for. The Australian has a great advantage over us anyway, for I understand that most of the plants are flowered in the open ground, which is a great economy of time and space.

Advances of the Year.

This year shows a tremendous advance in every section except the whites, and these remain much the same. Eaton has not been so prominent as many seemed to think it would be. Merza when well done beats it hollow, and so does Florence Molyneux. Eaton is certainly rough, which kills it in a close competition.

Next week we will look over the commercial field and see what changes may be beneficial to our pocketbooks and tempers.

BRIAN BORU.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Christmas Plants.

Thanksgiving will see the end of chrysanthemums with many of us, and if we should have some left the public fancy seems to leave them. After that all attention will be paid to the flowering and ornamental plants for Christmas sales.

Poinsettias.

Poinsettias want to be kept at 60 degrees at night—not lower. If suffering for root room, give them weak liquid manure twice a week; don't attempt to disturb their roots. Fumigation does not hurt poinsettias, but that does not destroy mealy bug, which is the worst enemy they have, and now is about the time they appear. The bugs cluster around the real flowers and nectar cups. If in pots, lift each plant down, and while one pair of hands holds the plant in position, let another man direct a fine but strong stream of water from the hose. It will wash them out clean, and no alarming number of the bugs can return before the plants are sold or flowers cut.

I will repeat that of late years our customers want 8 to 12-inch pans of these from 1 foot to 18 inches high, and if you are short of them, don't attempt to make them up now or you will have only a lot of yellow leaves at Christmas. Defer that until the day before they are wanted.

Cyclamen.

Cyclamen I once tried in 50 degrees at night, and at 60 degrees, and at 55 degrees, and found the latter temperature to be the thing—a little slow at 50, a little weak at 60, but 55 was all right. This is a plant you can recommend with all confidence as a good house plant, for it has no superior among flowering plants for the purpose. Except the few that you keep in your show house, it pays to elevate them on 5 or 6-inch inverted pots, with plenty of tobacco stems between them. It will save you much fumigating, and smoke as dense as you can, the fly is hard to reach among the leaves and buds, for a well-grown cyclamen should be a mass of leaves.

We found last year that handle baskets of plants, which we fill in various ways, sold very readily when filled with five or six moderate-sized cyclamen of various colors and a few plants of maidenhair fern. On bright mornings syringe the foliage of cyclamen. For large, early plants growers sow in September, and you can sow now and obtain splendid plants in twelve months.

Begonia Lorraine.

Begonia Gloire de Lorraine will, I suppose, again be a most prominent holiday plant. It lasts but a short while when taken into the dining room or drawing room, or even kitchen, but is so beautiful that good people overlook that, and it surely lasts as long as a bunch of roses. It is not only as a pretty single plant that it is in demand; a plateau filled with Lorraine for a dinner table center piece is grand in effect where that color is desired. And this is where small, well flowered plants in 3 or 4-inch pots are most useful. This plant also pays to stand up on pots, giving plenty of air around the foliage, and where they can be watered more freely without wetting their foliage, which is not desirable. Put tobacco stems among the pots.

What should we do without this delicious weed? If it is not an absolute essential to soothe our troubled spirits or solace our lonely hours, it is indispensable in a greenhouse, and with all the lectures and talks and essays against nicotiana it will be used by man (I hope not woman) for all ages. The young woman who objects to your smoking before marriage learns in after years to run upstairs for your pipe, and likes to see you enjoy it. One more word in this diversion: Did you ever notice that the few men of your acquaintance who neither chew, smoke nor take a little stimulant are so infernally active and chattering that, however profitable they may be to themselves, they become a nuisance as companions.

Ardisias.

The Ardisia crenulata is the best of the berried plants, handsomest and most lasting. It will do very well in a temperature of 50 at night. Syringe occasionally to keep the holly-like foliage bright and glossy.

Azaleas.

For some reason the early varieties of azaleas that we force for Christmas are more than usually advanced this year. Particularly is this the case with Deutsche Perle. Let them come along; they will keep quite a while in a cooler house after being well flowered. Vervaeneana and Simon Mardner need a little more heat to bring them along as fast. Sixty to 65 at night and a daily syringing is what they want. Stop the syringing after the flowers are open.

Primroses.

The Chinese primroses are in fair demand at Christmas, and three or four plants in a 9 or 10-inch pan sell well. We never grow them in a larger than 4-inch pot, and if carefully done, three or four of these can be put in a pan without much harm to the plants. We thought little of Primula obconica for years. That was not the fault of the beautiful plant, but our obtuseness. I have never seen them at their best as early as Christmas, and it seems a pity to sell them with only a few spikes when they make such splendid masses of bloom two months later.

Bulbous Plants.

There are only two kinds of bulbous stock that are sold much at Christmas—viz., the Roman hyacinth and the paper white. It is too early for tulips, and there are many more desirable flowers. A pan of Roman hyacinths or paper white narcissus not over 8 inches in diameter is very salable. These, of course, should have been brought in some weeks ago. The hyacinth will force quickly, but is much better for this purpose when brought along slowly. Then the foliage is stiff and the flower spike stout. Still more should the paper white be grown cool and light. Then it is a fine flower, even when grown for cutting, which 90 per cent of all these are. It is a poor, flimsy flower when forced with much heat.

If lily of the valley is wanted in pots or pans, you must depend on cold storage, and if put in about December 4 or 5 will be fully developed by Christmas. Of course, you are all fully aware that cold storage valley wants a very different treatment from the newly imported. The latter is reluctant to be disturbed from its slumber, and will make no start without strong heat and moisture, while the cold storage has been arrested and is anxious to grow. Still this should not be put into a very cool draughty house. The same bed as you use for forcing in February will do, but 55 to 60 is as warm as the sand should be, and the atmosphere about the same. Little or no shade is necessary in the dark December days.

Other Plants.

The above includes about all the flowering plants we have to offer our customers at the holidays. A good supply of Boston fern, araucarias, kentias latanias, arecas, dracaenas, ficus, and plenty of small ferns and Asparagus plumosus you should always have on hand, and it is good advice to say that it is poor policy to leave your wants in these important lines to within a few days of Christmas, when you are driven and the large plant grower also has his hands full.

The very handsome baskets of plants, either assorted or of one kind, have been gradually growing in favor, even outside the precinct where multi-millionaires most do congregate, and many are now sold in our cities. Of these I would like to say something next week, for it can be truthfully said that these are none the better for being made up more than a day or so before they are wanted. They are jammed in regardless of roots, and are never so pretty as the day they are filled. This is not so with a fern dish, which if carefully filled will last a long time, and if filled a week or two in your houses will fill up and look much better than when just filled.

FOREIGN CHRYSANTHEMUMS IN AMERICA.

BY E. G. HILL.

For the past twenty years we have annually imported the foreign varieties and tested them to find their value in this country. A catalogue of 1884 contains the names of forty-six sorts, about equally divided between continental and English varieties, not one of which is now in general cultivation, and only Elaine, Temple of Solomon, C. H. Glover and Geo. Glenny are even remembered by name.

For some four years later, up to 1888, the catalogues list principally foreign sorts, most of them of French origin, and a few exhibitions previous to that date showed imported sorts almost exclusively; these exhibits were wonderfully beautiful, but the standard of excellence was totally different from that of the present time, and as the years have gone by, American varieties have crowded the foreigners almost entirely off the boards.

Mrs. Jerome Jones was introduced in 1892, and had a marked effect upon the standard of judging high quality blooms both for exhibition and for commercial purposes; we had been working up towards this standard, but a glance at this fine mum emphasized the necessity of the upright stem, covered with glossy, stiff foliage quite up to the flower, and as this idea took firmer hold each year, more and more of the foreign varieties have been denied a place.

M. Calvat has sent out some thirty to forty new sorts each year for the past ten years, all of which have been imported into this country and tested; there have been some magnificent blooms among them, mammoth in size and of fine form and color, in many particulars approaching the American ideal and showing a marked improvement from year to year, yet up to the present time only the following sorts have met any recognition at all in this country: Mme. Carnot, M. Benj. Giroud, Mme. F. Perrin, Australian Gold, Soliel d'October, Fee du Champsaur and Lucie Faure. Mme. Carnot, in the hands of an expert grower, reaches a fine quality for exhibition; M. Benj. Giroud finds favor with a limited few, as a nice early commercial red, but it is undersized and rather short of stem; Lucie Faure had nearly all the necessary good qualities, but too often came bare-necked and rather soft; the same may be said of Fee du Champsaur, though in a less degree: Australian Gold came within one count of being a perfect commercial yellow, its only defect being its long neck.

Soliel d'October, after five years is again being sought for, as it is showing promise of many useful qualities; I cannot help saying that I have little doubt that a number of these varieties have been too hastily discarded; importing novelties into this country gives them a serious check and they seldom disclose their true character during the first season of trial and frequently even in the second year we do not succeed in showing them at their best, as we may not have taken the bud at the right time, or they may have been planted too early or too late, or the food may not have suited the variety.

We can all recall cases of new sorts which have narrowly escaped oblivion, even though in the hands of several good growers, which have finally surprised the experts by showing what they could do. No better example comes to mind at the moment than Robt. Halliday, and it had no voyage across the Atlantic to give it a back-set. Of all the French varieties introduced into this country none has made the record or held the place attained by V.-Morel, and it must be a fine pink mum indeed that can compete with it, though far from being the ideal in color.

The survival of English sorts makes little better record than that of the French, though nearly all of the best novelties are tried annually. White and Yellow Fitzwygram are well known over here, are heartily admired and almost as frequently disliked by growers who cannot "do" them. R. H. Pearson is recognized as a finely colored early, of medium size; Mrs. Weeks is fatally soft in petal, though exquisitely beautiful; Mrs. Barkley, H. J. Jones, Kate Broomhead, have all secured a good footing and at the present writing it looks as if this season would see them mount the ladder a round or two, though this is not fully assured.

A few sorts originated in England are well known and will doubtless hold a permanent place. These are the two variations of V.-Morel into bronze, Chas. Davis and Lady Hanham, each of which is unsurpassed in its own partienlar shade, and this year we are trying Chas. Davis Improved, an unfortunate though thoroughly descriptive name of a variety which is delightfully promising at the moment.

The Japanese importations of past years have not held place for even so long a time as the European sorts, though Mrs. Alpheus Hardy, Lillian Bird and the rest of that charming colony linger with us as beautiful memories, though no longer seen outside of private collections. Golden Wedding, however, remains as one of the very best and most useful of all the varieties from the land of the chrysanthemum.

Glory of the Pacific is another Japanese which has remained in cultivation a good length of time, this from the fact that previous to the past two years there have been no good early pinks to take its place, but with Lady Harriett in the field, Glory of the Pacific will have to drop out.

In the early '90s a goodly number of Japanese varieties were sent here under number and many were christened and sent out by American firms, but most, if not all, have been relegated to the rear.

The question naturally arises: Why this complete practical displacement of the foreigners by the Americans? I think that the answer is found in the different style of setting up the blooms at the shows abroad, as compared with our home exhibitions, as well as the difference in the style of arranging flowers for social occasions. To the exhibitor who shows his flowers on a flat board it makes no difference whatever as to the habit of the plant, the stem may be so slender and weak as to only allow the flower to cast all its glances to the floor, as Chenon de Leche, for instance. Its magnificent spread is all right on a board, but nowhere else does it show to advantage. A variety may have a neck a foot long and bare of any leaf, as Tri. de St. Laurent, but no one knows the fact except the grower, when only the bloom is shown. Form is a strong point with the American mum, but many reflexing sorts cover very wide spaces on the board where they would be decidedly out of form in a vase, all depth and no diameter.

And right here it might be well to inquire if we have done the wise part in discarding so many of these very large and showy varieties, when they would add so greatly to our exhibits in points of interest were they admitted. We are not ready to go back to the flat boards except as an incidental part of an exhibit, as at Kansas City this year, where it attracted wide attention as a novel feature, but we would suggest that rules might be formulated allowing these giant blooms to have their stems reinforced by a second stem with foliage if necessary; if carefully done and all growers allowed the same privilege, we do not see that it could be regarded as a backward step, and the exhibition would be the gainer by allowing the entry of some of the most wonderful blooms extant which are now debarred by our present standards and rulings.

The handsomest and most practical French variety since V.-Morel is the one bearing the label Mlle. Marie Liger; here is perfection of foliage, habit, stem, size, form, in pleasing pink, with fine constitution, besides being an easy doer, and bringing no seconds; this variety may well be accepted as a standard of excellence and our French friends did well in awarding it the American prize at the Paris exposition.

Among the more promising English and French varieties of the past two years may be mentioned Ville de Bordeaux, a most delightful pink variety, and we think that it has the many good qualities necessary to commend it to the American grower; Miss Jessie Cottee, a golden yellow sport from Etoile de Lyon, is extremely promising to those growers who have seen Etoile at its best; Durbin's Pride is magnificent in size, form, breadth of petal and fine color; Nellie Pockett is assured a permanent place, one of the most useful of dwarf reflexing whites. Souv. de Md. Durbin is a reflexing yellow of Morel type, but must be tried against Goldmine and Mrs. Taggart.

By the middle of the present month the fate of many a probationer variety will be sealed; the line dividing the sheep from the goats will be well defined and a select few will be added to the chrysanthemum peerage.

AMONG THE GROWERS.

Peter Reinberg's, Chicago.

Pictures tell a story so much better than a printed description that we will allow our photographer to present the results of a recent visit to this immense establishment. Under each of the pictures will be found the dates at which the plants were benched and also the date on which the protograph was taken.

The carried over Liberties are doing finely. As will be noted, the pink rose Mme. Chatenay is given considerable space, as is also the new rose, Sunrise. Both take well in the Chicago market. The two Beauty houses show quite clearly the difference in growth of plants benched at different dates.

POMPON CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

BY JOHN N. MAY.

That these little gems are steadily becoming more popular one only need look at the gardens of every class during the late fall when nearly every other blooming plant has been killed or their flowers at least destroyed by early frost, heavy rain storms, etc., and you can see the pompon chrysanthemum flourishing in all its glory; a few degrees of frost does not mar its beauty, hence it is the one bloom that everyone can enjoy when all others are past. The three or four old varieties of artemisias which our ancestors planted in their gardens, and in many sections can still be seen growing luxuriantly after half a century or more in the same position. From these have sprung the greatly improved forms and almost every shade of color known in the chrysanthemum today. One of the reasons that this flower is coming to the front so fast is that it is of the easiest possible culture; in fact, it might be justly said that it needs no special culture whatever. All that is necessary is to take a young, healthy plant from a 2-inch pot in May, plant it out in any position in the garden, not directly under the shade of trees. If the weather is dry give it one or two good waterings, keep the weeds clear of it till it gets a fair start. After that it will outgrow almost every kind of weed. Then about all the attention it will require will be in September, after the buds are set and the top becomes heavy thereby. A little support by putting three or four short stakes in around the plant and tying a piece of stout string all around it to prevent its being broken by strong winds, heavy rains, etc. With the above treatment a great show of flowers can be had at very little cost.

But if you want to see the pompon in its best form it will well repay the little additional care necessary to obtain it. To do this select an open spot in your garden, away from the shade of any trees or vines, but protected somewhat from strong prevailing winds. Plant out young, healthy plants from small pots as early in May as is safe. When they have started to grow fairly well take a sharp knife and stop the main leading shoot back to within seven or eight inches of the ground. In a short time it will throw out quite a number of shoots. These should be allowed to get six or eight inches long. Then reduce these to seven or eight, leaving, of course, the strongest, and in thinning them out leave them so that the plants have about an even amount on all sides. These shoots that are left and which are to form the main basis of the plant should in turn be shortened back to five or six inches. After this the plant will make very rapid growth, and the weak lateral shoots should be carefully cut away and the stronger ones allowed to grow on till the buds are all set.

If these details are watched carefully, a large bush, two feet or more through, will be nicely formed. At this stage staking and tying sufficiently to prevent storms breaking the branches will be necessary after the buds are set. Thin these out by carefully pinching out all except five or six from each shoot of the larger flowered varieties and for the small button flowered kinds eight to ten buds can be left on each shoot. This will allow the individual flowers to develop to perfection and be much larger and of better color than when all the buds are left on the plants. A shoot with a stem from twelve to eighteen inches long, having from five to ten nicely developed flowers, makes an exceedingly attractive spray. For this purpose the earlier blooming varieties are especially desirable, as the above treatment will generally bring them into full flower before there are many of the larger chrysanthemums in bloom, though all the varieties are equally benefitted by the little additional care.

The above method of culture is applicable to all who do not possess a glass structure of any kind. For those who are fortunate enough to have cold frames or cool greenhouses in which to protect their plants from storm and frost their season can be extended until the end of November, or later, by making a selection of both early and late blooming varieties. For growers so situated the best method will be to grow only the very earliest varieties planted out in the open ground, and for the later varieties grow them in pots or boxes. For this method of culture take plants of the same class as for the open ground, pot them into a larger size, using a good loamy soil, with only a small amount of fertilizer added for this shift. Cut the leading shoot back to four or five inches above the soil. When it has started outside shoots one or two inches long, shift into another pot two sizes larger than the one it now occupies.

As soon as the roots get a fair start into the new soil they can be stood outside on a bed of coal ashes and grown on steadily, attending to the thinning out of shoots, etc., as advised above. By the first week in July they will be ready for their last shift. For this last potting a somewhat richer compost will be necessary than for the earlier stage. The smaller or weaker growing varieties should not have more than a 2-inch larger pot than before, while the stronger and more robust growers can be put into pots three or four inches larger than the size they were occupying. But in each case the pots should be well drained with broken potsherds, or similar material. After this potting considerable care must be exercised not to overwater them till the roots have taken possession of all the new soil. In fact, they should never be allowed to get too much water during the entire season or they will lose most of their larger leaves and get a severe check. As soon as bad storms are due in the fall they should all be removed from their open air position, either to a cool greenhouse or cold frame, where they can be protected. In all other respects they should be treated as described for the better class of plants in the open ground. Plants grown this way will make nice ornaments for any decorative work.

The varieties of pompons are now so many and so varied in their general size, color and form that to enumerate varieties would only be superfluous. Take the earliest for the open air culture and whatever colors strike your fancy for the pot culture. They are all exceedingly attractive and beautiful and will well repay anyone for the little time and attention required to produce them in abundance. For selling as cut flowers grown in the open ground, the following I have found very desirable:

Oneita, yellow; Vera, white; La Purite, small white; Little Pet, small yellow; Delicatissima, white and bluish pink; Caritas, shaded pink; Julia, deep shaded red; Mr. Astic, soft yellow; Angelique, pure white, and one of the oldest varieties known to cultivators. Bob should still find a place in every collection.

This list could be extended almost indefinitely and the enthusiast cannot make a mistake by adding any or all the varieties to his collection, as the taste is undoubtedly greatly on the increase for these little gems for late autumn decoration of the garden, the conservatory and the homes generally, of the rich and poor alike. This is one of the few flowers that can be enjoyed by everyone having a plot of ground a few feet square.

BORDER CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

BY PATRICK O'MARA.

[Presented to the Chrysanthemum Society of America at the Chicago convention.]

It is a somewhat difficult task to prepare a paper, brief as it must of necessity be, on the subject given. The first snag is that this being read before a national society, it ought to be so prepared as to be applicable to the entire country. To follow the curves and waves of the isothermal lines which the maps show on the United States is a task beyond me; to say that this or that variety would do well here and not there is to invite in advance challenges as to accuracy of statement from which I shrink.

This preamble is based upon the assumption that the coiner of the title assigned to me had in mind the preparation of a paper on hardy chrysanthemums for the border. Perhaps his idea was to obtain a paper on the outdoor culture of "queen 'mum;" if that assumption be correct the task is simplified, bearing in mind the adage "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread."

In these days when all the flowers grown for market and exhibition are produced under glass, it would seem ridiculous to attempt growing chrysanthemums in any other way to compete with them, yet it is only a few years ago when Wm. Tricker literally "swept the deck" with flowers grown in an outside border, and that, too, in the metropolis of the country. It is he who should write a paper on this subject, for it is the man who has accomplished the difficult, I might almost say, the seemingly impossible, who can best tell how it was done. I well remember the amazement of the "experts" as they looked at the fine flowers he displayed, many of them being varieties which were then regarded as being obsolete. It was there demonstrated once again that care and attention with a knowledge of the requirements of the plants under treatment can accomplish what would seem to be the impossible.

This paper will be read before men who are specialists in chrysanthemum culture, therefore it would seem like "carrying coals to Newcastle" to dilate on soils, pinching, watering and so forth, but as it may be read by others not so well versed in the "a, b, c" of the gentle, commonplace art of gardening, a few words at least would seem to be essential on these and kindred matters pertaining to the subject embodied in the title of this paper.

If the cultivator has a greenhouse he will put in his cuttings in February, in a temperature of say 50 degrees, potting them when rooted, of course, and seeing to it that they are watered and shaded so that they are not checked in their development. Of all plants it may be safely said that none are more sensitive to a check than is a chrysanthemum and none are more disastrously affected thereby. It may also be said in general terms that good, rich, fibrous soil is a necessity to successful culture. To these must be added the other necessities of a free circulation of air, care in not overcrowding and shifting at the proper time.

By careful attention to these necessary details fine plants should be had for setting out in May, say from the tenth to the fifteenth, in the latitude of New York. There is nothing more unreliable, however, than fixing an arbitrary date for outdoor planting. The weather conditions prevailing at the time must determine whether the propitious season has arrived; hence the cultivator must determine for himself from the existing weather conditions whether or not it is best to plant out. It is safe to say that it is better to be a little late than early.

The border should be a deep rich loam and well drained. When practicable or possible I would advise selecting the south side of a fence for a border. This situation will be best in the late fall days even if it has some disadvantages in the "dog days." Some of the disadvantages are that their friends, the bugs, to use a general term, will in all likelihood find that situation very congenial for their well being and will assemble in force to regale themselves on the repast of juicy foliage. The aphides, green and black, will come and tobacco dust must be used liberally to checkmate them. With a strong force of water and a fine spray nozzle in addition they can be kept away; but they must not be allowed to get a foothold or the task is multiplied many times. Caterpillars are likely to come and must be picked off. The squash bug will find them, too, if he is in the neighborhood, and he generally is; he knows a square meal when it is spread for him. The grasshoppers, plague upon them, come around, too; these fellows must be taken by the neck, or any other convenient part, and unceremoniously grounded into a fertilizer—by the foot is a good way and very convenient. The brown fly will surely come, too, and he must be gotten rid of in the same manner.

By the middle of August, if all these matters are attended to properly, strong, bushy plants, maybe a couple of feet high and wide, are the result and the foundation is laid for the fall feast of flowers. By that time all pinching back must be stopped. The flowering shoots, and they are all of that character, are allowed to develop and soon the disbudding begins. All the buds but one on each shoot, generally speaking the topmost one, had better be rubbed off so as to get better flowers at the expense of quantity. At this time liquid manure will be found beneficial, in fact necessary for the best results. Sheep manure makes a good liquid fertilizer. In the absence of this—but it is easily obtainable—barnyard manure can be used as a liquid stimulant. The quantity to be used is best determined by the condition of the plants, and it is always best to wash it in thoroughly immediately after applying. Staking will, of course, be found necessary in most cases, that will suggest itself.

With the approach of cold nights protection will be found necessary. The best plan is to provide what is commonly known as "protecting cloth," a medium heavy grade of muslin which has been oiled. This can be tacked to the top of the fence, having previously sewed it into proper widths; put up a light support in front of the border to sustain it and pull it down at night. By this method all the early flowering varieties may be grown successfully outdoors in the north.

It is unnecessary to burden this paper with a list of the kinds, but I will mention a few as a guide: Mme. Bergmann, Mme. Gastellier, Glory of Pacific, Polly Rose, Monrovia, Primo, Solar Queen, Lady Fitzwygram, Daydawn, Mrs. Henry Robinson, Marion Henderson, Mrs. E. G. Hill, Rose Owen, Yellow Queen.

The pompon varieties are all essentially "border" chrysanthemums, being hardy. Although not requiring the same amount of care as the others, yet they are benefited by it and well repay the extra labor.

Trade Conditions.

With the passing of the great society event of the year, the equine exhibition, passed also the hazy beauty and warmth of Indian summer, and the longed for crispness of the first breath of winter is here. With the lower temperature comes higher prices for all good flowers of every kind. The demands of grand opera patrons will make themselves felt from now on and the season may safely be said to have opened in the retail florist trade. That it will be a brilliant one is assured.

It will surprise no one if before December the whole upper floor of the Coogan building is devoted to the interests of the wholesale florist business in many of its branches, including plants and supplies. The room is an ideal one for the purpose. The floor will be asphalted. The space is even larger than the whole room now used by the Philadelphia flower market, and the heating and lighting facilities are perfect. It is an opportunity that should not be lost. Possibly a company may be formed, or the whole may be placed in one individual's hands with sub-letting privileges. In any event its acquirement will be another step towards the utilization of this whole building in the florists' interests, including the basement with its bowling alleys for club meetings and recreation, a prophecy which seems to be nearing fulfillment.

The retailers made their windows brilliant during the past week. Some of them were unique. Fleischman had a plaster of paris horse in pajamas in the center with floral embellishments.

The orchid displays have been almost universal. It is said these were the favorite flower of society at the show and this may account for the slump in violets. From $2 a 100 to 75 cents in three days was a fall that jarred the market to its center. There were oceans of them which went begging. Next season the lesson will perhaps be learned and "geese will not be killed which lay the golden eggs."

Hanft Bros. had the Fitch-Chataine wedding this week at the Madison Avenue Presbyterian church, a brilliant affair, in which Timothy Eaton mums were conspicuous, forty of the pews in addition to the altar being decorated with them, with broad satin ribbon and an abundance of wild smilax. At the house a canopy of lily of the valley, Brides and Harrisiis and garlands of Eaton, Bonnaffon and Morel mums. The bride's shower bouquet was of lily of the valley. This firm also sent a carload of designs to Yonkers to the De Jersey funeral, including over a dozen pieces.

A Trip to Briar Cliff.

Next week fuller details as to the new house at "Briar Cliff" and those who visited it on Thursday last will be given. Nearly forty visitors accepted the invitation of Mr. Paul M. Pierson to an outing up the Hudson, which was accompanied with perfect weather and every possible courtesy, making the day a memorable one for all. The visitors met at the Grand Central station at 9:30 a. m. and under the chaperonage of Mr. L. Pierson and Mr. Sefton proceeded to Scarboro, where carriages were in waiting, and Messrs. Paul and F. R. Pierson on hand to welcome us. The trip was at once begun to the Briar Cliff Farms, where the many greenhouses were inspected and where the model farm of W. W. Law, Esq., excited universal admiration.

In the rose houses the stock was in grand condition, and a pleasant incident there was the personal welcome of Mr. Law, who made everybody feel at home. The inspection of the dairy houses with their 1,200 Jerseys occupied a delightful hour, and the processes of caring for the cows and preparing the milk and butter for market were fully explained by the competent superintendent. It may interest your readers to know that the butter made here sells in New York at 80 cents a pound, the cream at $1 a quart and the milk at 12 cents a quart. So much for absolute purity.

The new greenhouse which everybody came to see is 55x300 and has its counterpart at Scarboro, described in my notes on my visit to F. R. Pierson's a few weeks ago. The curved sash bar, made of galvanized iron, V-shaped, is the interesting feature in the construction. Into the iron bar the cypress is fitted in such a way as to prevent decay. The size of glass is 24x16, and the curved panes at the eaves make danger from ice impossible. The amount saved yearly in the item of painting alone is from three to four hundred dollars. Not a particle of wood is in the interior of the building. The general opinion expressed by all was: "The finest house I ever saw." Both Messrs. Pierson and Sefton, the builders, were present and gave everybody a thorough description of the construction, which further details will make plain in a later issue.

The visitors were given an elaborate dinner at Briar Cliff Lodge, one of the finest hotels on the Hudson. The day was voted a "red letter" one by all. A number of large growers were present from outside cities, as the list following will indicate: Ernst G. Asmus, West Hoboken, N. J.; Ellwood Brant, Madison, N. J.; S. S. Butterfield, New York; Benj. Dorrance, Dorranceton, Pa.; Eugene Dailledouze, Flatbush, N. Y.; Mr. Doremus, Madison, N. J.; Jos. Heacock, Philadelphia, Pa.; Henry Hentz, Jr., Madison, N. J.; J. C. Hillman, New York; Edwin Lonsdale, Philadelphia, Pa.; Alex. Montgomery, Natick, Mass.; Frank L. Moore, Madison, N. J.; A. T. De La Mare, New York; Frank McMahon, Seabright, N. J.; Joseph Millang, New York; S. C. Nash, Clifton, N. J.; A. N. Pierson, Cromwell, Conn.; W. R. Pierson, Cromwell, Conn.; Robert Simpson, Clifton, N. J.; J. Austin Shaw, New York; W. J. Stewart, Boston, Mass.; John H. Taylor, Bayside, N. Y.; A. L. Thorne, Flushing, L. I.; E. J. Taylor, Southport, Conn.; C. W. Ward, Queens, L. I.

Brooklyn Horticultural Society.

The regular meeting of the Brooklyn Horticultural Society took place at the Germania Club, 122 Schermerhorn street, on Monday evening. The fact that just thirteen were present is no indication of an unlucky convention, although lacking two of a quorum. The meeting resolved itself into an informal gathering and during the evening harmonious discussion towards the completion of all plans for the great session in February was indulged in.

The next meeting will take place on Wednesday evening, December 10, and at that time a large attendance is requested. On February 18 Mr. Ward will give a lecture on his favorite subject. On Friday evening, February 20, the banquet will be given in the Germania Club, and a finer room for the purpose it would be hard to find. Arrangements are already completed for the accommodation of 300 guests at the feast, and the menu submitted met with general approval. The membership is now fifty-five and it is expected that the society will number 100 before the convention.

Mr. Wallace gave some interesting reminiscences of his western visit, his impressions of the great greenhouse plants around Chicago and Joliet, and the fine business skill of James Hartshorne in securing "Fiancee," for which he predicts a great future. Brooklyn seems thoroughly alive to the honor done the city by the Carnation Society and intends to "do itself proud."

Notes.

The New York Florists' Club will hold its annual meeting Monday evening, December 8. The election of officers will be of special interest this season and a big crowd of members is expected.

There is a new wholesale firm in town, Ridell & Co., 34 W. 29th street, close to Gunther's. Mr. Ridell was formerly with Mr. Thos. Young, and is well known by the trade and is popular.

Bradshaw & Hartman's fifty cases of holly arrived Saturday in good condition and are going fast for Thanksgiving. Owing to the long drought south this season the outlook for first-class holly for Christmas is rather cloudy and the supply will certainly be limited.

Dunne & Co. have an interesting novelty from Porto Rico, a few dozen pineapple plants, every one with its ripe "apple," fully developed. They are planted in tubs and sell at $5 each.

I notice the "Anna Foster" fern in all the Bon Ton windows on Fifth avenue and Broadway. In 7 and 8-inch pots it seems to be very popular, and the sale of the large plants has been almost universal in the leading stores of the city.

Charles Millang's new conservatory has been filled and emptied a half dozen times since its completion, with splendid and salable palms and ferns. He finds this new feature of his business very encouraging and next year will double his capacity.

Bowling.

The New York bowlers found the cold northeaster too wet a proposition for bowling enthusiasm and only a few materialized on Monday evening. The scores follow:

Siebrecht	159	146	165	221
Lang	195	185	181	177
Traendly	163	170	136	110
Thielmann	180	187	177	220

BOSTON.

The Market.

The weather and all things considered, more goods were to be expected than came in, and more customers should have been in after them. But there was enough for the demand and a few to carry over.

The big football game being at New Haven, did not wake up the business on even crimson and blue goods as much as it might and, I hardly think, as much as was expected, and prices on such goods were enhanced but little thereby.

Chrysanthemums are still coming quite freely, but it is expected that they will drop out of the market earlier this year than for a year or two past, because they came in extra early. Perhaps, as of old, Thanksgiving may about clear them up this year. No tears will be shed.

Nothing new except a little store at 66 Huntington avenue, near Mechanics' building. It is a little jewel named "Imperial Florist" and managed by Feffer & Co.

Prices, as given in our Boston list on another page, do not allow for the probable jump at Thanksgiving, which may exist a few days only, or may prove permanent.

Salesman Ed. Chamock is painfully ill with a somewhat serious stomach difficulty.

Is it not a peculiarity of this season that violets do not throw a more marked perfume? Most of them now throw a marked earthy smell not usually ranked as a perfume.

Casey's Place.

Accident brought me here, but it is a good place to visit. Who does not know Casey, formerly chief grower of the Perle rose for the Boston market? His greenhouses are in Melrose, on the south side of one of those rugged crags so common in that part of the world, and so hemmed in by it that expansion looks out of the question. Whatever is being done in that line is in connection with hardy material across the street, where the low land makes costly filling in necessary even for that. So much of this has just been done that work is a little behind in the houses, but a mixed growth, for local trade strictly, is coming on nicely.

A novelty in his office consists of a quite complete collection of the beetles and butterflies of New England, and the young gentleman knows how to talk about them, too, which is also a novel idea in a florist's make-up.

A flying trip to the houses of Peter Ball found them in their usual spick and span condition, but now quite off crop; while the nearby houses of "Jack" Foote are distinctly in a fine crop of carnations, but being built on the plan of an old feudal castle, one must be well versed in ancient history to describe them. I think the portcullis is there and am sure of the moat, because I nearly fell off the drawbridge into it. But there is not a finer looking lot of plants in the commonwealth than that same Jack Foote's. J. S. Manter.

PITTSBURG.

As election day was the time of the regular monthly meeting of the Pittsburg and Allegheny Florists' and Gardeners' Club, it was thought well to defer the meeting until Wednesday evening, the 12th inst., which was done. It was chrysanthemum night, and we had a fine show of flowers, a rousing, big meeting and a lively and interesting discussion.

John N. May, of Summit, N. J., sent a lot of blooms of his newer varieties and promising unnamed seedlings; so did Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich., of theirs. Henry Eichholz, Waynesboro, Pa., sent a big bunch of the lovely pink Berkeley, and another of a lovely solid-headed pure white flower with stiff stems and good foliage. R. Vincent, Jr., & Sons, White Marsh, Maryland, sent a big lot of named pompon varieties cut from their outdoor fields.

Among our home growers the Blind Brothers brought in magnificent Golden Wedding and Timothy Eaton; Fred Burki had a sheaf of Mrs. Chamberlain in splendid form; the Phipps Conservatories, Schenley Park, contributed a lot of varieties not common in cultivation, and the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. showed samples of the choicest stock consigned to it by its clients. A member from McDonald, Pa., brought in some well developed flowers of Indiana for identification. He had 500 more of them at home, he said, and on the spot an Allegheny market man bought the lot.

The flowers were arranged in vases on the side tables. As the meeting progressed vase after vase was placed on the president's table, and if the flowers were new varieties they were taken out one by one and handed around among the members to be properly seen, handled and commented upon, and the boys were mighty snap with their opinions, too. In the case of standard varieties the contributors or growers had to stand up and tell all about them, how they wintered the old stock, propagated the new, planted them and when, soil, watering, ventilating, insects, etc., and as question after question was fired at them they had to 'fess right up. A man with a secret needn't come to our meetings. And, to the credit of the boys be it said, they speak out the truth without halt or reservation.

Among J. N. May's flowers were "45 G," a pink with very large broad petals, likely to be one of the largest and most distinct of exhibition sorts. "44 G," autumn- foliage colored flowers and a full round head. "57 G" has very large pale pinkish bronze flowers, flat petals, shows considerable eye, only for exhibition use. "49 G," brilliant crimson, very large, open-eyed flower; for private or exhibition purposes. "25 G," clear yellow, full reflexed. "60 M," distinct and novel, very full head of clear pink; evidently a good pot plant. "25 M," crimson-purple, silvery reverse, large, flat flower. "65 M," very full, pink. "50 M," deep wine-purple, full head, stout stem, late. In Mr. May's lot were also Queen Alexandra, a lovely, large flower, pale pink, good stem, good foliage; Godfrey's King, full, reddish, turning to yellow near center, and Golden Hair, dense bundles of fine, hair-like petals.

In Nathan Smith & Son's lot were "26-1-'01," yellow, tinged bronze, fine flowing blossoms. "15-8-'01," very good, dark red, spreading flowers. Providence, white tinged with pinkish and lemon, close round heads, fine stiff stems, good foliage. Pluma, white tinged with pink, dense heads, very hairy. Guy Hamilton, pure white, broad but full flowers, with curious incurve-hooked petals. F. J. Taggart, the yellow, massive, hairy giant, the winner of the $150 premium and gold medal at the recent Kansas City flower show.

If in any of the foregoing varieties I am a little off in the colors, please lay it to failing eyesight and lamplight and very little time to note them.

In the Vincent collection of pompons were Little Pet, red; Anna Maria, pink; Yellow Queen, bronzy yellow; Julia Lagravere, crimson; Fairy Queen, pale pink; Nellie Bly, pink, a little later than the others; Rosinante, small, pale pink, very double; Maid of Kent, white, but shows eye; Kanaut, pink, very double, tall-growing; Naomi, rose pink, paler in center; Mrs. Vincent, bright crimson; Fire Ball, golden bronze, shows little of eye, and Gold Nugget, small, very double. There were many more, but the other boys ran away with them before I got their names.

Among our home growers the system of cultivation is much the same. The old plants are wintered in flats or pots in a cool greenhouse, and the propagation in spring is from the stoutest and fattest shoots. Planting on the benches is done from April till June. Soil is ordinary field loam with a fair mixture of rotted manure, and 4 to 5 inches deep on the benches. The Blind brothers use manure freely in the soil; Fred Burki uses less in the soil than he used to, and more later on as a top dressing. The former uses no commercial fertilizer, either in the soil or as a top dressing, or as a liquid manure; the latter uses a little bone meal in the soil, but nothing else. Fred Burki likes sheep manure, but has difficulty in keeping it from heating before using. Last summer, however, he got some from an eastern firm. It had been put through some process to prevent fermentation. He was doubtful of it at first, thinking it might have lost its virtue, but no, it proved all right. All feed their mums with liquid manure from the time flower buds are first seen till the blossoms begin to color.

The sense of the meeting among the commercial growers was few varieties. Mr. Burki grows Bergmann, Glory of the Pacific, Merry Monarch, Marion Henderson, Mrs. Robinson, Viviand-Morel, Maud Dean, Bonnaffon, Mrs. Chamberlain and Timothy Eaton.

Jos. E. Bonsall, of Salem, Ohio, a visitor at the meeting, and a big grower of chrysanthemums, described his method. He winters his plants as our folks do, pots off the sprouts in early spring, then plants these out in a cold frame, then retops them, striking the cuttings in the frame, and in June transplants these rooted cuttings direct from the frame to the benches in the greenhouse, and he gets strong, sturdy, short-jointed, well-leaved plants, that take to their new quarters at once and go right ahead.

Julius Ludwig made the boys' mouths water when he told them of some splendid flowers he was going to bring to the meeting, but couldn't, for he had just sold them. He paid 40c apiece for them and sold them for a dollar each! Then he told us of the vast quantities of the little pompon hardy varieties the German farmers and truck gardeners in the suburbs grow and bring in to market and sell them for a few cents a bunch, and how the rich people, more than the poor people, buy them. And still there isn't enough to supply the demand. And he urged that the farmers grow more of them, but be more choice of their varieties, holding to the pretty pinks and eschewing the dirty purples.

Mr. Clark, of the Cut Flower Co., declared that selling these flowers for 5 or 10c a bunch was inexcusable, the rich people would just as readily pay $5 as 25c a bunch for the pompons if they took a fancy to them. "Yes," returned Julius, "that's all very well in isolated stores, where they cannot see what the next fellow has, but at a stand in the market place like mine, where everyone around me is selling for 10c a bunch, were I to charge a dollar I couldn't sell a bunch at all."

Then up sprang John Bader to champion the poor people and everyone gave rapt attention and smiled and urged him on, for John is chuck full of sound common sense and practical knowledge. He is awfully earnest, though, and speaks with his arms as well as his voice, and he gets mad, too, if you contradict him.

Some of our distant friends may ask: Does it pay to send flowers to your club? Yes, you are teaching us, broadening our knowledge and helping your fellowmen. And, sub rosa, let me tell you, orders have since been sent to our contributors for every variety of chrysanthemum shown here; and apart from plants, telegrams were sent to Maryland for pompon cut flowers.

Four new members were admitted. The next meeting will be held Tuesday evening, Dec. 2, and the subject for consideration, Christmas greens, plants, flowers and materials used at Christmas.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

At this writing the retail, as well as the wholesale florists are making great preparations for supplying the Thanksgiving trade on Wednesday and Thursday. The past week the cut flower trade was not very encouraging for this time of the year, although the advance orders for Thanksgiving day have been very good. Outside of this, however, trade has been unquestionably dull.

Although the weather up to a few days ago has been summer-like, it has been very cloudy, which has shortened stock in roses very much and they are really scarce today. The same may be said of carnations and violets. Prices have advanced 2 and 4 cents on roses, 1 and 2 cents on carnations, and violets are almost double what they were last week.

Chrysanthemums are still the leading flower when good blooms can be obtained. The wholesalers say that good roses of all kinds are going to be scarce this week, as nearly all their shippers are off crop. But there will be a good supply of carnations, violets, Romans, valley, paper whites and stevia. Nearly all the stock in the market at present is of good quality and brings a fair price. Smilax, galax leaves and asparagus were in good demand the past week.

The Florists' Club Meeting.

The November meeting of the Florists' Club, held last Thursday afternoon, was well attended and was one of the most interesting meetings of the year.

Twenty members were present when President Dunford called the meeting to order at 3 o'clock, with all the officers in their places except Vice President Windler.

The resolution to change the hour of the meetings from 3 to 2 p. m. was read for the second time. After the regular order of business was disposed of the members inspected the chrysanthemum blooms sent in by Nathan Smith & Son, of Adrian, Mich. They showed the following varieties: Kansas City Star, a light pink; Mrs. J. J. Mitchell, crimson; Ethelyn, light pink; Intensity, dark red; Mrs. F. J. Taggart, dark yellow; F. J. Taggart, light yellow; Edgar Sanders, bronze; H. W. Buckbee, large yellow; Harry Fenn, bronze; Minnie Bailey, pink, and Polar Queen, large white. The judges, John Steidle, Chas. Juengel and J. F. Ammann, voted them all good seedlings.

The visitors at the meeting were S. S. Skidelsky, of Philadelphia and F. W. Maas, of the Plant Seed Co. The two essays which were to have been read by Messrs. Halstedt and Mohr will be read at the next meeting of the club in addition to those which were assigned for the December meeting.

President Dunford called on the members who visited Chicago for a few remarks on what they saw. Mr. Jablonsky was called first. He read a paper about two yards long, which was very interesting and funny, and in which he told the St. Louis growers to get the moss off their backs and follow in the footsteps of their Chicago brothers.

Otto Koenig gave a very interesting talk on what he saw of the Louisville cemeteries while on a recent visit to that place.

Mr. Frank Weber was the next speaker and talked from a retailer's standpoint, which was very interesting to the store men.

Mr. J. F. Ammann spoke on what he saw at the show and the large establishments around Chicago. He also related some of the funny stories told by little Foley at the banquet.

J. J. Beneke spoke on Chicago hospitality and wound up his remarks by asking the chair to appoint a committee of three with full power to act and invite the Chicago and Milwaukee florists to visit St. Louis after the holidays. The committee appointed consists of J. J. Beneke, Otto Koenig and J. F. Ammann.

Mr. S. S. Skidelsky gave a few minutes' interesting talk on the new things he has seen in carnation plants. The meeting then adjourned until Thursday afternoon, December 11, 1902.

The Shaw Banquet.

The thirteenth annual banquet to gardeners, florists and nurserymen of St. Louis and vicinity, provided for in the will of Henry Shaw, was held in the Mercantile Club rooms Wednesday night, November 19. Prof. H. C. Irish, of the Missouri Botanical Garden, presided in place of Dr. Wm. Trelease, owing to the sickness of Mr. Trelease's oldest son, Frank. Dr. John Green, of the St. Louis Academy of Science, acted as toastmaster. The decorations were much the same as in former years.

Some of the speakers and their subjects were as follows: Prof C. K. Watrous, of Des Moines, Iowa, "The American Pomological Society;" F. M. Judson, "The Shaw Banquet;" Dr. Tarleton H. Bean, of the World's Fair, "Our Forests;" Mr. Frederick W. Taylor, "Horticulture Pure and Simple;" C. O. Williams, of Quincy, Ill., "The American Apple Growers' Congress;" Prof. A. T. Erwin, "The Iowa State Agricultural College;" Prof. Albert Blair, of Champaign University, "Professional Men as Orchardists;" James W. Dunford, Jr., president of the St. Louis Florists' Club, "The St. Louis Florist;" Herman Von Schenk, "Plant Pathology." The speechmaking and the funny remarks of the toastmaster lasted until midnight.

Apple Growers' Meeting.

Nearly two hundred apple growers attended the first meeting of the Apple Growers' Congress, which took place at the Lindell Hotel last Tuesday and Wednesday, November 18 and 19. One hundred and twenty-seven new members were enrolled during the meeting.

The World's Fair was indorsed and the Department of Horticulture was commended. Frederick W. Taylor, chief of agriculture and acting chief of horticulture, of the World's Fair, acted for Mayor Wells to welcome the congress to St. Louis.

The newly elected officers are as follows: President, Senator H. M. Dunlop, of Salem, Ill.; vice president, Judge W. R. Wilkins, of St. Louis; secretary, T. C. Wilson, of Hannibal, Mo.; treasurer, Wesley Greene, of Des Moines, Iowa; statistician, Prof. J. F. Stinson, of Mountain Grove Experiment Station, Mo. The meeting adjourned Thursday evening to meet again in November, 1903, when the second annual congress will be held in St. Louis.

Judge Eugene W. Stark, of Stark Bros. Nurseries, Louisiana, Mo., was a regular attendant at the meeting. He says his company will make an elaborate display of apples at the World's Fair.

Notes.

Frank J. Trelease, oldest son of Prof. Trelease, of the Missouri Botanical Garden, and who is now sick with a mild attack of scarlet fever, won the first prize for a photograph of a group of young rabbits in the annual picture competition conducted by the St. Nicholas magazine.

Martin Reukauf, representing H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia, is with us this week booking orders for the holiday trade.

John W. Kunz has left St. Louis and is now with J. M. McCullough's Sons, Cincinnati, Ohio. J. J. B.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

On Tuesday afternoon the general feeling among the wholesalers was that the Thanksgiving trade as a whole would average about the same as last year. There were not near enough Beauties to meet the call, but orders for all other stock were being filled in full. Of carnations the supply was ample. Prices were held well up to quotations. The orders from outside points were numerous, but did not average so large individually, as last year. It seemed evident that the continued warm weather and considerable amount of sunshine during last week had materially increased the home cut of many of the buyers, and their demands upon Chicago were less in consequence. At the same time, the total volume of trade was large. Late in the afternoon prices on medium and low grade carnations showed signs of weakness.

Notes.

On Monday wintry weather arrived, but no snow as yet, and we are favored with a considerable amount of sunshine for the season.

After paying all the expenses of the recent exhibition, the treasury of the Horticultural Society will receive a surplus. But there would be no surplus except for the fact that many of the premiums were contributed. However, the exhibition came very near paying its own way on its merits.

A meeting of the Florists' Club was called for Wednesday evening. The date was unfortunate, as few in the trade can attend a meeting the evening before Thanksgiving.

Recent visitors: B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia; J. A. Evans and wife, Richmond, Ind.; C. E. Heite, Kansas City, Mo.

Indications are that well berried holly will be scarce this year.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The past week has been a more active one than the week previous, and all kinds of stock sold at a slight advance.

The dark, gloomy weather has shortened the cut of roses. Beauties are arriving in very good condition, but the supply is limited, the demand consuming all of them. In Maids, Brides and Liberties the best grades are quite scarce, while the medium and shorts are more plentiful.

The carnation receipts are not nearly so large and the supply is again about equal to the demand; white ones are scarce. The fancy grades sell well at better prices.

Paper white narcissus and Roman hyacinths are arriving in large quantities. The demand for them is good, owing to their newness and also to the scarcity of white carnations.

Chrysanthemums, the ruling fall favorite, will soon have to give way to the staples. The supply of mums still equals the demand. Some very good blooms of Dean, Eaton, Appleton, Bonnaffon and Jones are arriving.

Harrisii lilies are now arriving in large lots and the supply from now on will be regular. A number of our local growers are forcing them in large quantities.

Fred Burki sent in his first cut of lilies last week. He is also cutting some good mignonettes.

H. L. Blind & Bros., are devoting a house to the growing of Christmas plants this year. They have a lot of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine specimen plants, which they expect to have in bloom for the holidays.

Charles Koenig can well be named the "Bulb King." He is forcing large quantities of bulbs this season, which he grows to perfection.

The Pittsburg Rose and Carnation Co., at Bakerstown, are sending some very fancy Maids, Brides and carnations to the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. They also receive Bon Silenes and Cusins from that company.

Mr. E. C. Ludwig, of the Allegheny market, reports business very good. Ernest always has a great many pretty little novelties on his stand, which attract the eye of the flower buyer.

Breitenstein & Flemm had a unique table decoration last week, which was very appropriate for the fall season. Mammoth English hothouse grapes, Cypripediums insigne and Farleyense were used, and the effect was beautiful.

Notes.

John Perron, general foreman of the Allegheny Park conservatories, died Monday evening of Bright's disease, after a year's illness. The funeral was held Thursday.

One hundred and ten large cases of wild smilax and 5,000 yards of Jersey laurel festooning were used to decorate the Duquesne Garden for the banquet of the Scottish Rite Masons last week. Mrs. E. A. Williams had this contract, and the decorations were novel and original, for which she received many compliments.

J. M. Phillips' Sons have opened a seed house at 646 Grant street and are now preparing for spring, 1903, business. E. H. Phillips will be in charge.

Gustav and J. W. Ludwig are exhibiting a very pretty and interesting collection of R. Vincent, Jr. & Sons' pompon chrysanthemums, which attract considerable attention.

At the next meeting of the Florist Club Tuesday evening, December 9, "Christmas Plants" will be the topic for discussion. An exhibition of blooming plants will be made. All members are requested to bring specimen plants.

Hoo-Hoo.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Prices advanced sharply last Friday and have been sustained since. Several large affairs requiring great quantities of flowers were followed by a heavy Thanksgiving demand. Chrysanthemums are by no means plentiful, great numbers having been used lately. Carnations that were selling on the streets are now eagerly bought, and some days were actually scarce. The bulk of the demand has, however, been for roses and chrysanthemums. The poinsettia has made its appearance; also lilac. W. J. Baker is receiving some early paper white narcissus.

The Flower Market.

The directors have elected Samuel J. Bunting, the well known Easter plant and cut flower grower, to fill the vacancy in their ranks which has existed since the market was organized. As the terms of service of the members of the board were incorrectly printed before, I give herewith the correct list: For three years, H. C. Geiger, Joseph Heacock, W. K. Harris; for two years, S. J. Bunting, Edwin Lonsdale, Herbert G. Tull; for one year, W. P. Craig, R. G.

Group of Nephrolepis Piersoni at the Tarrytown Exhibition.

Palmer, J. W. Young. Mr. Bunting being elected by the board will serve until the next annual meeting in October, when his term will expire, with those of his one year colleagues.

The auction sale on Saturday morning was well attended. W. K. Harris wielded the hammer in a way that showed that he was master of the situation. The prices realized for the auction of stalls were vary satisfactory when it is considered that no one knows yet just what a choice position is worth. All the "Fifth Avenue" stalls went first, F. and H. Mergenthaler securing first choice for $16. The total amount realized was $150.50.

Florists' Supplies.

H. H. Battles remarked the other day that nine-tenths of the dinner tables in Philadelphia were oval shaped, so Robert Craig ordered oval shaped pans as an experiment to be filled with Lorraine begonias edged with tiny asparagus. H. Bayersdorfer & Co. are now making tasty birch-bark covers for these oval pans, which promise to be a taking novelty. They were pretty busy in this bustling establishment, but both partners took a little time to chat a few moments about business, and Mr. Berkowitz showed some of the interesting things in the great warehouse. Baskets are coming this season with unusually long handles, probably to better display flowers and to give room for big bows of ribbon. A very attractive basket was made of some sort of green braid, very narrow in shape like a boat. The size of the demand for immortelles is startling, the last steamer alone brought in 386 cases, of which 274 were at once shipped away on orders. There are very pretty artificial holly wreaths, most natural in appearance, and many other lasting reproductions of perishable varieties of foliage.

A New Departure.

Only a few years ago all the ribbon used by our city florists came from the wholesale millinery houses; then S. S. Pennock took up this branch as a side issue to his wholesale florist business; a few months ago M. Rice & Co. added ribbon to their florists' supplies. Now this city boasts of a simon pure florists' ribbon firm. The firm name is Turnbull & Crawford, composed of J. Q. A. Turnbull, formerly with both the above firms, and W. W. Crawford, son of Robert Crawford, Jr., the well known retail florist. They are doing an encouraging amount of business and expect in a short time to have an unusually desirable selection of ribbons and novelties.

Bowling.

The Florists' bowling team defeated the strong Penn Coyd team on the latter's alleys last week. This was a great victory, as the Penn Coyd is a very strong club, while the Florists' team is a new one. The scores were very close, the Florists winning the first game by 15 pins and the last by 70. The team consisted of Moss, Conner, Gibson, Polites and Yeates. There are six clubs in the Bowlers' League; each plays three matches of three games each with all the others. The Florists now lead with a score of six games won with three lost.

Notes.

H. H. Battles had the decorations for the president's dinner and reception on Founders' day. The work was on a very elaborate scale, great quantities of Beauties, white chrysanthemums, violets and orchids were used, besides many other plants and greens. The effects in the dining room were in red, white and blue heightened by electric lights. The entire decorations were pronounced more beautiful than any before seen in the Union League.

Jos. Kift & Son had the decorations for the dinner given by Charles Emory Smith on Saturday to the president. Bridesmaid roses and Farleyense ferns were chiefly used. Many distinguished guests were present.

Hugh Graham had a very handsome wedding decoration for the daughter of a senior member of a well known department store, at the Mercantile Club on Monday. Great quantities of chrysanthemums and roses were used.

J. J. Habermehl's Sons received one order of 800 yellow chrysanthemums from Fred Ehret on Wednesday.

Ernst G. Asmus, of West Hoboken, was in the city on Saturday.

Johnson & Stokes state that the open weather of the last three weeks has wonderfully cleared up the bulbs which up to that time had been selling slowly. Mr. Sherry, who is with this firm, notices a scarcity in scarlet tulips, especially Belle Alliance. White Romans and paper whites went slowly, but are now nearly all sold. Some of the daffodils, especially Von Sion, are in over supply. Named hyacinths and tulips are eagerly sought. The bulb business has increased fully 5 per cent over last year.

John Ruppert, who is with the H. A. Dreer Co., says that they expect to have 18,000 plants of Pandanus Sanderi by next autumn. Orders are being booked now for delivery next October. He anticipates that the entire stock to be offered will not prove sufficient to meet the demand. PHIL.

BUFFALO.

A week of dull weather, but bright business is the record for the past week. No event of great moment has occurred, simply a general all around good demand, which is the healthy state of affairs. I always like to visit the busy emporium of W. F. Kasting and see a scramble for flowers and the place about cleaned out, and that's the state of affairs for some two weeks of late. When you see a place piled up with second and third class stuff you get a dull, depressing sensation similar to that produced by three feet of snow having broken in your roof. Brother florists agree with me that chrysanthemums have sold better this year than for the past four or five years; every quality has been in demand. Very good flowers have brought $4 per dozen, although more have been sold at $3, and we even know of one fashionable firm which charged $9 per dozen for some fairly good flowers. These are Thorley prices, and possibly Thorley accessories may account for the artistic figure.

Being more in the city of late we are not doomed to miss the delightful pleasure of seeing visitors of the profession who stray this way. Quite recently that very bright young antipodean, Mr. McHutchison, gave us a call. If he is a fair sample of the product of that island continent of the southern seas, no wonder they are a progressive people. And they are nearly on top in more ways than one—in their almost ideal government; in their liberal and advanced thought; their high average of wealth distributed among all the people, far better than here; their high rate of wages, and yet cheap living gives its classes plenty of time and opportunity for social and sportive recreation, and they are a nation of sports. With his wide knowledge of the profession and business faculty I can see nothing but success for this cosmopolitan Mr. Mc.

A visitor of a different type, but also willing to sell you something was Mr. Peterson, of Cincinnati. He had some splendid samples of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine and Pandanus Veitchii sent on, and at the Genesee hotel invited the florists of the city to inspect them. He must have taken some good orders, for whoever saw his plants could scarcely resist buying. I was largely interested to bring Mr. P. and our local Royal Dane within speaking distance. There is no interest or pleasure in introducing Englishmen or Germans or Irish or even Scotch, Poles or Italians, because with us they are on every street corner, and some of the nationalities compose whole wards of our cities and congregate together like rodents in the Paris sewers, but Danes are few and far between. So I steered Mr. Peterson to Eggertville, and you should have seen the mutual gladness of countrymen meeting. "Illego skee ratskey koo vum," which meant "glad to see you," said both of them. Mr. Peterson had scarcely entered the door and the proprietor had not been found when Mr. P. said, looking at such a simple thing as some stock geraniums, lobelias and ageratums, "This man is a gardener, all right." And so it is you can tell by the simplest thing whether the man who is running the place is a gardener or an ex-barber or broken down real-estate man.

It was very interesting to find out that these worthy Scandinavians had both worked in the same village and in the absence of a trolley car had both often walked the road to Copenhagen. Sorry I can't give you more of the dialogue, but Mr. C. exclaimed with animation: "On rady thar wodo skee skew housy was goody vody drunkee," which Mr. Peterson afterwards told me was a house that sold good fire water, and both remembered it. It was a most pleasant hour or two. After admiring Mr. Christensen's very fine benches of carnations and a splendid bench of mignonette we parted, both of the Danes claiming descent from Hamlet and I declaring that Shakespeare was a Scotchman.

W. S.

JOLIET, ILL.

The first fall flower show held in this city was given last week in a large tent in a central location. The display was excellent, all the local florists being represented, and several from Chicago and other points. The show was so popular with the public that on Saturday it was decided to keep it open over Sunday. A generous number of prizes were awarded.

Much enthusiasm was developed and it is believed that a much larger show will be given next year. The exhibition was under the auspices of the Joliet Improvement Association, in which Mr. F. S. Allen is a leading spirit.

OMAHA.

Owing to a large number of receptions held during the past two weeks, we can say business has been really good. While the weather has not been all that it should be, it has interfered very little with the sale of mums, which are the flowers mostly in demand.

Everyone in this vicinity has done very well with cut mums. As for the pot plants, the story of the last two years will suffice; that is, Peterson Bros. have the best and only pot mums in town.

Prices at retail are about as follows: Mums—Small, 75 cents to $1; medium, $1.50 to $2.50; large, $3 to $4 per dozen. Some fine Eatons bring $5. Beauties range from $1.50 to $5 per dozen; Meteors, 75 cents to $1.50; Maids, 75 cents to $1.25; Golden Gates, $1 to $1.50. Violets, $1 and $1.50 per 100. Carnations, 50 to 75 cents per dozen. Some Romans have made their appearance and stevia will be in quantity in a week.

The Florists' Club has decided to have a bowling tournament December 2.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

The Executive Committee of the American Rose Society met in Philadelphia on Friday afternoon, November 14, and took up the matter of preliminary arrangements for the forthcoming exhibition and convention, which will take place on March 24, 25 and 26 next, in Horticultural Hall, Philadelphia.

The meeting and exhibition will be held in conjunction with the spring exhibtion of the State Society, and the joint premium list is now being prepared and will be issued shortly. The American Rose Society will offer a very complete schedule of the rose classes, while the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society's offers will be confined to bulbous and other seasonable stocks. In addition to the regular prizes of the Rose Society there have already been received several promises of silver cups and other special prizes in cash or plate, which will be duly announced. Special inducements will be held out to growers for rose plants exhibited in groups.

With cooler weather and a shortening of the supply come better prices. Some special Beauties bring $5.00 a dozen, novelties in carnations reach $5.00 per 100, and extra violets in bunches of 100 command $1.50. The chrysanthemum supply is shortening markedly. Some extra fine blooms have touched $6 but $3 a dozen will buy about the best in the market. The market seems to be "recovering" from its long "illness."

DALLAS, TEX.—The Texas Seed & Floral Co. gave a three-day chrysanthemum show at its place of business that was visited by a host of admiring people. In addition to the display of chrysanthemums, which rivalled that at many competitive exhibitions, there were table decorations, changed daily, and other floral arrangements. Each of the 6,000 visitors was given a flower of some kind.

HAMILTON, ONT.—At the recent annual meeting of the Hamilton Gardeners' and Florists' Club officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: T. Lawson, President; E. J. Townsend, Vice President; Charles M. Webster, Secretary; D. McLeod, Treasurer.

The above quotations represent the opiulons of the majority of the dealers as to the condition of the market after Thanksgiving. It is notable that the best grades of roses hold up etiffy to top quotations and any weakoess is always at the bottom.

With the change to much cooler weather the cut may diminish and prices he well held all through the list.

There were many chryanthemums for Thanksgiving and prices on the best were well held, but there was some weakness in the lower grades.

A COPY of the official report of the proceedings of the sixth annual meeting of the American Park and Outdoor Art Association, held at Boston, Aug. 5, 6 and 7 last, has reached us from the secretary, Mr. Charles M. Robinson, Rochester, N. Y. It is a very interesting document.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market

Business continues good in our city and everything looks bright for our Thanksgiving trade. A few heavy rainstorms during the past month have helped to shorten up the supply of outside stock, but stock remains equal to the demand at most stores.

Inside roses are not quite up to the standard in quality. Carnations are fine and bring good prices. Chrysanthemums are the fad and immense quantities are being disposed of. Mrs. Jerome Jones, that beautiful white, was never seen finer in our market. E. Dailledouze we have for yellow; also Bonnaffon. In pink Eda Prass and V.-Morel fill the bill. Violets are grand. The wet, open weather has greatly helped the quality of them and prices remain firm.

Prices: American Beauties, $2.50 to $3; short, 50 cents; Brides and Maids, 50 to 75 cents; Kaiserins, 50 cents; Liberties, 50 to 75 cents; Brunners, 16 cents per doz. Carnations, Hobarts, $1; mixed fancies, 50 cents; Estelles, 35 to 50 cents; Scotts, 15 cents; Lawsons, 25 cents; Croekers, 15 to 25 cents; Portias, 15 cents; Hills, 25 cents, and Lorna, 35 cents; Valley, 50 cents per doz; paper white, $1 per 100. Good maidenhair fern remains scarce. Inside chrysanthemums, $3 to $4; outside ones, 20 cents per doz. Violets—Princess, $1.25; California, 75 cents to $1 per dozen bunches.

J. Gilmore, Elmhurst, brings in the finest Liberties and Maids.

Domoto is headquarters for the finest chrysanthemums. Among those seen are some grand Bonnaffons and Dailledouze in yellow and Jones for white, with Mrs. Hunt for pink.

A. Galloway, Fruitvale, has a bench of carnation Estelle that would be worth a long journey to have a peep at. All the latest varieties are grown by Mr. Galloway, but they all look cheap compared with Estelle. Some weeks ago while this young gentleman was preparing to throw out an old bench of Lawsons he came across a beautiful white sport growing among them. The habit is the same, only the color is a beautiful white. What does this sport mean for Mr. Galloway? A castle on "Nob Hill," or a castle in the air? It is to be hoped the former.

Florists' Protective Union.

At a recent meeting of the San Francisco Florists' Protective Union the following officers were elected to hold office for one year: President, W. J. Forrest; vice-president, J. Gilroy; financial secretary, J. C. Cappalman; recording secretary, J. Canavaris; treasurer, J. Debano; guide, C. Beverly; sergeant-at-arms, F. Peterson.

Business of all kinds will be laid over until after the holidays, when the union will look after the interests of its members. Ninety members are now on the rolls, and new members are coming in at each meeting.

One of our San Francisco retailers threatens to discharge all his men if they join the Florists' Union, and will run his business with girls (isn't that too bad!). How will it be if the girls form a union? It might be well if all the retailers in San Francisco remember that they are living in a union town which is ruled by a union mayor. Unionism is the fad in our city at the present time, and it seems to be nothing but union, union, everywhere. Even our 'Frisco babies are members of a union; I mean the regulars. The volunteers are not in it.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Everything is nearly cleaned out in our market at the present time, and I am afraid that stock will be a trifle scarce for Thanksgiving. Most all carnation growers are now off crop, and rose growers are very much the same way. Beauties especially are scarce and, save for short-stemmed ones, there are hardly any to be had. A fair supply of medium grade Brides and Maids are in, but good stock is scarce.

Carnations are very scarce, with the exception of white, which color is at present equal to the demand. Some Estelle, though rather short-stemmed, readily brought $2 per 100. The price on Monday for best fancy roses was from $3 to $4 per 100.

Mrs. E. T. Grave, of Richmond, is sending some fine Dorothy. They readily bring $3 per 100. B. P. Critchell is cutting some very good carnations at present, especially America, which rivals Estelle in color, as grown by him.

There are still some fine chrysanthemums to be had, but the supply is fast being exhausted, and Thanksgiving business will about wind them up. W. Rogers is cutting some of the best that are to be had at present.

The South Park Floral Co. sent in some specimens of their new rose, Franz Deegen. They were in fine shape and looked as if they would sell well. They are away ahead of Perle, as to size and form, when partly open showing the dark orange colored center, and are very beautiful.

C. P. Dieterich was in the city buying up stock for his store at Maysville, Ky. Besides growing and retailing flowers, Mr. Dieterich does a very large nursery business.

Mr. Weltz, of Wilmington, O., and James Frost, of Greenville, O., were callers. C. J. Ohmer.

Holyoke, Mass.—Con J. Millam, the popular young clerk of "Shaw the Florist," has resigned his position and has accepted a position with a New York firm. Trade in general is very good. We anticipate a scarcity of mums; owing to the extremely pleasant weather, growers were unable to hold them back.

Aurora, Ill.—J. M. Smely has purchased the greenhouses and residence he has been leasing from Roscoe Saunders. The consideration was $10,000.

Decatur, Ill.—Swan Peterson, of Gibson City, has opened a floral store in this city.

Club Meeting.

The last meeting of the club was a lively one, as the committee on entertainment had prepared a program of fun and music which was most thoroughly enjoyed by all, including the ladies, after which a monument dedicated to the living was unveiled and disclosed a fine layout of punch and sandwiches, the whole proving a great surprise to all.

All those who visited the show at Chicago were loud in their praises of the fine show and also the exceeding hospitality of the florists of that city. One of the kids who went with us read a dream which he avers was caused by the multiplicity of names which he read on the various exhibits, and we christened it "Bemb's dream."

The Dream.

It was Sunset and we took the Liberty of entering the Golden Gate, and there we saw a great many American Beauties. At Sunrise we watched the Daybreak kiss the Morning Glory. During the night we were fortunate enough to see several Meteors with their Golden Glow. It was Child's play to look at the Bride and Bridesmaids, the friends of the Kaiserin, who, surrounded by the Royal Farleyense in Pink, Yellow and White Ivory vases, formed a fit setting for any Perle. Nelson Fisher, who tried to attend at Sunset a Golden Wedding of Mrs. Potter Palmer and Marquis, the cousin of Queen Louise, brought with him Crane, Avondale, Bradt and Cressbrook as ushers, but received the cold shoulder from Great Scott and his daughter Estelle. The next day there was a 4 o'clock tea at Mrs. Morgan's, attended by young Fitzwygram, Bergmann and the old Major Bonnaffon, with his niece, Maud Dean, and as usual the Major was a little rusty.

The beautiful Sunshine in its Autumn Glory was just the thing for Adonis and Lillian Pond, who live near the Goldmine, to give a card party, at which young Appleton was determined to beat Chadwick and Eaton for the Golden Trophy. The little lady near the bunch of White Clouds was Enchantress, waiting to see if she would be cut out by Apollo's Fiancee. Her two friends, Flora Hill and Lorna, went to Norway, where their father's prosperity proved their Guardian Angel. While crossing the ocean they fell in with a few Mermaids and all these young buds were put in cold storage and fell fast asleep.

Notes.

The several retailers gave shows or openings last week, the most gorgeous of which was that of J. F. Sullivan, who has made very extensive improvements in his store, which will now with neatness and care vie with any establishment east of New York. Rag.

Neosho, Mo.—J. G. Angel has added 3,000 feet of new glass and has planted it to roses and carnations. Last season, from November to June, he cut over 4,000 blooms from 100 plants of Scott carnation, which he thinks was pretty good. He hardly looks for such results this year as his plants are not so good. He says he might as well try to run his greenhouses without plants as without the Review.

Wm. F. Dreer. (Wichuraiana X Bon Silene.) Foliage rather small and slightly glossy. Blooms in clusters with a bud similar to Mme. Elle Lambert, creamy-white bordered with bright rosy-pink. Open flowers, quite double, 2½ inches in diameter, pure white or creamy-white, and exceedingly fragrant, like its pollen parent.

Wm. K. Harris. (Wichuraiana X Bon Silene.) A vigorous grower, with bright green shining foliage. Flowers pale flesh-color, about 2 inches in diameter, double to the center, blooming freely in clusters. Fragrance very marked and similar to its pollen parent.

Robert Craig. (Wichuraiana X Beaute Inconstante.) Foliage rich glossy green. Bud perfect in form, yellowish to light apricot in tint. Open flower full to the center, 2½ inches in diameter, yellow shaded with apricot, deepening to the center, being a combination of yellow, apricot and fawn, in the way of Wm. Allen Richardson.

Edwin Lonsdale. (Wichuraiana X Safrano.) Reddish tints on the young shoots, with dark glossy green leaves. Flowers 2 to 3 inches in diameter, quite double, pale lemon-white, with a delicate Tea fragrance. Bud well formed.

John Burton. (Wichuraiana X Safrano.) Rather small but not glossy foliage. Flowers medium in size, very double, and of a delicate pink or peach color, similar to La France. Fragrance very delicate and decided.

Messrs. Conard & Jones Co., West Grove, Pa., register the following new cannas:

Hiawatha. Bronze foliage, striped with green. Flowers rosy pink, dappled silver blush, bordered cerise. Height about three feet.

Chautauqua. Bronze foliage. Flowers vivid scarlet; trusses carried high above foliage.

Gladiator. Foliage leathery green. Flowers yellow, spotted crimson; smaller center petals solid crimson. Height four to five feet.

Louise. Flowers soft rose-pink, delicately dappled and streaked red; petals long; dower spikes unusually large. Height about five feet.

WM. J. STEWART, Secretary.

THE YELLOW EATON.

Among the many new chrysanthemums there are few which will receive a warmer welcome than this most promising variety. It is a sport from that grand chrysanthemum Timothy Eaton, of which it is a counterpart in every respect except color.

It is a deep lemon yellow shade, the center being slightly darker than the rest. This valuable acquisition was found among a bench of Eaton during the fall of 1901 on A. N. Pierson's place at Cromwell, Conn., and this year it has been the object of considerable attention.

W. R. PIERSON.

MONONGAHELA, PA.—J. A. Keeney has torn down his old houses and is putting up five new ones, four of them 18x70 feet and one 11x62 feet. They will be used for growing bedding plants and lettuce.

NOBLESVILLE, IND.—R. E. Farley, who recently purchased John Harold & Son's greenhouses, is preparing to put up 16,000 feet of additional glass.

TORONTO.

Trade during the past week has been very much of a see-saw nature, on an average good, but very much up and down. The mums are giving place to carnations, roses and violets, and the wholesale man appreciates the change when he reckons up his bill for boxes, etc.

Carnations are coming in now with very fine stems. Some extra fine Lawson is being sent in by Mr. Chas. Turp. This variety promises to be very good this season with most of the growers around here, and at present yielding with any of the best varieties.

Mr. W. L. Lindsay, a graduate of the H. Dale conservatories, who started out at Tilsonburg a year or so ago, is sending in some very fine roses and carnations of the standard varieties.

The Florists' and Gardeners' Association held its regular meeting on Tuesday, Nov. 18. The committee appointed to report on the carnation show reported favoring holding the carnation show early in March, and intend to make this a greater success than those of previous years. It was recommended to add a prize list, with cash value, for the different exhibits. When the meeting adjourned a social time was held and everybody enjoyed themselves.

Mr. E. Walker, of Hamilton, was a visitor in town this week. D. J.

ANNAPOLIS, MD.

Rudolph Kaiser supplied some very handsome and elaborate decorations for a recent wedding in high life. The residence was elaborately decorated with wild smilax, potted plants and chrysanthemums, while the church was handsomely decorated with palms, ferns and chrysanthemums, a large bell of white mums, violets and valley being a central feature. The bride carried a shower bouquet of white violets and valley, the maid-of-honor had white chrysanthemums and the bridesmaids carried Dailledouze mums tied with yellow mull.

CORRECTION.

The display of twenty varieties of ornamental grasses at the New York show was on page 838 of our issue of November 13 through error credited to Henry Eichholz. The exhibitor of this collection was Mr. J. P. Sorenson, gardener to Charles Stewart Smith, Stamford, Conn., to whom the credit of making this fine display is due.

Florist Club Meeting.

The regular monthly and annual meeting of the Richmond Florists' Club was held at the greenhouses of The E. G. Hill Co., and important business pertaining to the welfare of the club was transacted.

An amendment to the by-laws abolishing all fees and dues of membership, and that all expenses of the club be borne by the proprietors of greenhouses and greenhouse furnishers was carried unanimously.

The annual election of officers resulted as follows: President, Vernon Graves; vice president, Joseph Hill; secretary, H. C. Chessman; treasurer, John A. Evans.

After other routine business and talks by those having visited the various shows, the club adjourned to partake of a very bountiful oyster supper furnished by the host, after which they enjoyed themselves socially and with games until a late hour.

The next meeting is to be held at the Grave greenhouses, the third Monday in December. The club is more than pleased with the success of the move to hold the meetings at the different greenhouses in turn, as there has been a good turnout at all the meetings so far, which augurs well for the future.

Note.

Ground has been broken for another large plant on the West Side. We are informed that several acres have been purchased and that the new concern is to consist of Charles Knopf, Wm. Bachmeyer and Geo. Bulerdick.

A TRAIN THAT DOESN'T HESITATE.

An old colored man employed as porter at a village station in Virginia, on the main line of the Southern Railway, was industriously sweeping off the platform when a waiting passenger accosted him with, "Say, uncle, does the 'Washington and Southwestern Limited' stop here?" "No, sah!" responded the old darkey solemnly, and as he continued sweeping he added: "No sah! the 'Wash'n'ton an' Soufwesten Lim't'd' don't stop yere; hit don't eben hes'tate."

Unconsciously the old darkey ascribed to this noted train a quality which has contributed much to its success and popularity as a medium of conveyance between New York and New Orleans, Chattanooga and Nashville and points en route. A solid Pullman train, composed of Drawing-room sleeping cars, New York to New Orleans and New York to Nashville, via Asheville and Chattanooga; Library and Observation cars New York to Atlanta, Club cars Washington to Atlanta, and Dining car, this superb train of the Southern Railway leaves New York daily at 4:25 p. m., over the tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad to Washington, and then over the main line of the great Southern Railway system it whirls its passengers on with the speed of the wind to their destinations. From start to finish it doesn't "hesitate," as the old darkey so quaintly expressed it, except at the larger cities and important junctions. Only five stops are made in crossing the entire state of Virginia, four in North Carolina and two in South Carolina. Atlanta is reached inside of twenty-four hours and New Orleans at 7:25 the second morning.

This train connects at New Orleans with the Southern Pacific's magnificent "Sunset Limited" train running through solid to San Francisco, which it makes in seventy-three hours, and Los Angeles in only fifty-eight hours. The latter train also makes connections at both San Antonio and El Paso, Texas, with through trains for Mexico City and points en route; and at both Mobile and New Orleans the "Washington and Southwestern Limited" connects with steamship lines for Central and South American ports.

A schedule of the Southern Railway's train service on its gigantic system which gridirons almost the entire portion of the South which lies east of the Mississippi River, shows that its management, too, does not "hesitate" in its efforts to extend its service and to cater in every possible way to the convenience and comfort of the traveling public. Two other trains, the "United States Fast Mail" and the "Atlanta Express," over the main line give connections through to New Orleans, and the "Washington and Chattanooga Limited," via Lynchburg, makes quick time to Knoxville, Chattanooga, Memphis, Birmingham and New Orleans.

In the "New York and Florida Express" and the "Washington, Richmond and Florida Limited" the Southern Railway maintains a double daily express train service the year round between New York and Florida, running through to Jacksonville with its own locomotives, conductors and trainmen. In addition it operates between New York and St. Augustine during the winter tourist season the "Southern's Palm Limited," a vestibuled Pullman train which represents the very acme of modern railroad magnificence, comfort and luxury. Every day except Sunday after January 17, 1903, this train leaves New York at 12:40 noon and in a trifle over twenty-four hours rapidly and magically shifts the scenes through all the changes from mid-winter to balmy spring: from naked, storm-tossed branches to soughing pines and the subtle mysteriousness of whispering palms: from gray skies and biting cold to golden sunshine and outdoor life beneath a dome as azurine as Italy's famed vault. All information regarding the same can be obtained at the Southern Railway's New York offices, 1185 and 271 Broadway.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

BASKET OF CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph of an old-fashioned handle basket with a one-sided arrangement of a variety of chrysanthemums, shading from dark bronze and salmon to the bright yellow of Col. D. Appleton, with graceful clusters of the miniature "Golden Chain" peeping above sprays of Asparagus plumosus.

The varieties of chrysanthemums used were Geo. W. Childs, Intensity, Chito, Bentley, Golden Chain, Col. D. Appleton and a small bronze variety unknown to us by name.

This basket was entered for competition at the recent Chicago flower show by John Mangel, and was awarded first prize as best basket of chrysanthemums. It was arranged by myself.

Next week we will present pictures of baskets of roses arranged in various styles. L. P. Walz.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

Commercial Varieties and Culture.

The season just passing can hardly be considered a very favorable one to the grower financially, the chief reason for this being the extremely fine weather that prevailed all the fall, and which permitted the gathering of dahlias and such like stock in the open garden even up to the first of November in many sections. The fine weather was also the means of keeping the flower buyers ont at their country homes enjoying the scenery, when by all established precedent they should have returned to the city and commenced using up the greenhouse product. It is useless also attempting to deny the fact that there is considerable overproduction of the medium to small grades, and these being thrown on the market in immense quantities find their outlet among the street dealers, and wherever one turns during October one sees only mums and more mums; and people who do not mind paying a fair price for good flowers, soon get weary of them, and look around for something else that is hardly so common.

The man that does not need to get his living growing mums will tell you that the chrysanthemum is "the poor man's flower. It can be easily grown and requires no heat, and since it can be bought on the street so cheaply it goes into many houses where other flowers do not, carrying with it an increasing love for the beautiful and inculcating elevating thoughts and ideas into the hearts and minds of our poorer citizens." It sounds all right. The mum is the poor man's flower all right enough, or at least it will keep a man poor that grows it for the wholesale market, but it seems to me that the cost of elevating our fellowman to an appreciation of the beautiful could be more easily borne by the Standard Oil Company or some other wealthy corporation than by the poor struggling mum grower.

Growers of early varieties were in hard luck and the only remedy seems to be to grow all the early varieties outside and reserve the more valuable inside space for the later sorts. Prices were satisfactory enough during November and up to the standard of previous years, and the obvious moral is, don't bother with the early kinds. Where a man retails his own flowers the case is different. He has his business systematized and knows what he can sell and grows accordingly, but there are many growers not so favored.

In selecting varieties to grow for next year my choice is as follows: Whites—Alice Byron, Mrs. Robinson, Eaton and Chadwick. These are all good and flower in the order named. Byron by the middle of October, and Chadwick can be kept till Thanksgiving. Of course there are many others and for those who are looking for early whites there are the white sports of Glory of the Pacific, which are all right if you have a market for them.

In pinks I prefer to grow Lady Harriet, Coombes, Balfour and Morel, with the new Liger as an addition. Lady Harriet will come in by the middle of October, and Mrs. Coombes, which brought $5 a dozen this year, will come in very shortly after. Marie Liger seems as though it would be a valuable addition to the class of commercial pinks. A. J. Balfour is now well known and for color it is hard to beat.

We have only room for one crimson and that is H. J. Jones. This variety is by no means ideal. It is a poor grower in spring and throws a mass of flowering suckers instead of good healthy cuttings, but it will bring in more than any other red to date.

In yellows I select Halliday, Appleton, Mabel Morgan, Goldmine and Yellow Eaton as being the most likely to bring in profitable returns. Halliday can be cut about the 18th of October and Appleton's season this year with us runs from the 20th of October to November 20th, so that it can be classed as midseason and late. Mabel Morgan and Yellow Eaton were both referred to in these columns very recently, so there is no need to say more about them, and Goldmine in many sections is proving very valuable.

It will be noticed that I do not mention any of the extra early varieties and the condition of the market this year was such that no one could conscientiously recommend them. Another year things may be different, though I don't know. Of course there is always a market either early or late for flowers of an exhibition grade, but such flowers are seldom produced by the purely commercial grower. I believe that if more of our growers kept a strict account of the expense attending the raising of every crop and the profits arising from the sale of the same that fewer mums would be grown. Some men that I know grow mums just because they provide a little ready cash to buy the winter's coal for the other stock. Every man works out his own salvation in his own way and as this is a free country every man is given that privilege.

Care of Stock.

It is a great mistake to throw the stock plants under the bench and leave them there for a month or two until room is found somewhere or other. Such a process is very weakening to the constitution of your future stock. Either put your plants into a box and set them at the cold end of a house somewhere, or take some of the finest cuttings and root them right away and use them for stock plants in the spring. The way things are run at most establishments, possibly the best way, is to retain the old plants, though such is not our practice. Brian Boru.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

The selection of wood for propagating tea roses and their hybrids is a duty that should never be entrusted to any but the most experienced and critical. The proper method of making a cutting can easily be acquired by the ordinary help after a few lessons, but it requires the practical and discriminating eye of the grower to pick out the wood that is suitable and of the proper condition of ripeness for this purpose, and the care exercised in selection will be amply repaid by the superior and uniform grade of the stock produced.

The continual forcing year after year having a tendency to weaken the vitality of stock must be overcome as much as possible by perpetuating nothing but the best wood from the most vigorous growing plants. Some authorities have advocated that in order to preserve the vitality and vigor of stock, flower stems only should be used; but after many years' experimenting with flower stems and strong blind wood side by side the difference was so infinitesimal as to be hardly perceptible, with all the difference in favor of the blind wood cutting in point of cost. By using flower stems at that season the loss in cut blooms would be such that few growers would care to experiment along such expensive lines.

The wood which grows high upon the plant and which is exposed to free air and sunshine is preferable to that which is lower or hidden in the heart of the bush, and should be in such a condition of ripeness that it cannot be bruised by pinching; the leaves should all be perfect and of a rich green color: all plants with foliage the least off color should be avoided; although cuttings from such will root readily enough they never attain as plants that robustness and vigor so essential in ideal stock.

As soon as the wood is cut the stems should be immersed in water, and the leaves sprinkled to keep them fresh and crisp until they are put in the sand. Allowing the wood to stand too long in water is very detrimental to the health of the cuttings, giving them what is called "the water heart," which weakens the eyes and materially prolongs the period of root formation.

There are many different opinions regarding the best style of cutting, some favoring one eye and others two and three eyes. I do not think there is much choice between the styles in point of merit, the after treatment of the cutting being of much more importance. With such varieties as Meteor and Liberty, where canes from the bottom are desirable, a three-eyed cutting ought to be the best. This gives two eyes above the sand and one at the base of the cutting, which invariably sends up a strong stem even in 2-inch pots. A well sharpened knife is indispensable so that a short clean cut can be made, as the smaller and cleaner the cut so much quicker will the callous form, and the arrangement of the rootlets be the more perfect.

The cuttings should be inserted in the sand without delay and at an equal depth of about one and a half inches, and the sand pressed firmly around them, thoroughly watered, and shaded if necessary. The leaves should be kept moistened twice a day during bright weather, but never syringed so late in the day that they will not dry before sundown.

With proper regulation of temperature, care in watering, shading and syringing, they will be ready for potting in about thirty days. Ribes.

TROUBLE WITH PERLE.

What causes Perle roses to drop their buds when just about formed? It seems to be a sort of rot. Or is it caused by a biting insect which after bruising the shoot causes the bud to drop off. I have several varieties in the same house, but only the Perle is affected, and this is the third season I have had this trouble with this variety. J. F. A.

With more data such as the quality of compost, drainage, frequency of liquid feeding, etc., I would have been able to give a more definite reply.

Conditions like this are usually the result of overfeeding, either by having too much manure in the compost, or too frequent use of liquid food when the bench is in an unfit condition, or from imperfect drainage, and frequently from both combined.

Several cases similar to this have come under my observation, but none of them after careful investigation could be traced to insect depredations.

Abstinence from liquid feeding, care in watering during the short days, accompanied by free ventilation, should in a short time effect a cure.

The night temperature in such a case should be 60 degrees, rising to 75 degrees during sunshine. Ribes.

HYBRIDIZING CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

BY ELMER D. SMITH.

[Presented to the Chrysanthemum Society of America at the Chicago convention.]

Before entering into the details of this subject, let us consider some of the natural conditions which have more or less influence upon our results. Dame Nature says the chrysanthemum shall be single and reproduce itself from seed; so in producing these marvelous flowers, with almost countless petals, we are working in direct opposition to her laws.

In some of our improved varieties, we are prevented from making further improvements, owing to the pistils or styles being abortive; and in other varieties the staminate florets provide little or no pollen. As you are aware, hybrids result from the crossing of species; and as this has not been attempted to any extent with chrysanthemums, it seems wise to confine ourselves to cross-fertilization.

In cross-fertilization, the operator's desire is to improve the chief characteristics, such as color, size, form and fullness. It is beyond human power to state exact results in uniting or mixing the colors of petals. Pollen from a white flower applied to a red may give red, white, or any of the intermediate shades, which would be the many varieties of pink. Mrs. Alpheus Hardy, white, and E. Molyneaux, red, gave Lady Playfair, pink. The union of red and yellow gives similar results—producing red, yellow and all the intermediate shades of brown and tan. We have more assurance when varieties of the same color are crossed. Improvements in color can only be attained by the union of colors, bearing in mind the laws of nature in making these unions.

The chrysanthemum, like the carnation, has a great tendency to revert to its antecedents. Hence it is we get many strange colors when two of the same color are crossed. The variety Mrs. J. J. Glessner came from Edward Hatch and Mrs. Jerome Jones, both of which are white or nearly so. This seedling partook of the parentage of Edward Hatch, which was Gloriosum X Ada Spaulding.

Form, size and fullness are improved only by careful consideration of these qualifications in the varieties at our disposal. We are more certain of advancement in the style of growth, securing those which are dwarf and sturdy by confining our operations to such varieties as possess these qualities. Large and small foliage can be produced by using those which have these peculiarities. What governs the potency of the pistilate and staminate parent, we cannot determine. We are dealing with minute affairs. The stigma may scarcely have reached maturity when the pollen is applied—or the pollen may be past its prime, with the stigma at the height of development. These varied conditions may have their influence upon establishing the character of the seedling.

In selecting varieties for this work, the two great classes for consideration are those for exhibition and those for the commercial grower. In the former, size is the most important factor, if the other qualifications are up to the average. The commercial grower requires staple colors, and the purer the color the better. Size, form, fullness and style of growth are important and should be taken into consideration.

Plants intended for seed raising should be staged in a dry, light house, and excessive moisture at the roots or in the atmosphere should be avoided. June and July struck cuttings grown to single stems in 4-inch pots are the most convenient. Such flowers, if given but little feed, are more natural, furnish an abundance of pollen and are easier to trim than the massive exhibition blooms.

The operation begins when the flowers are half open, by cutting the petals off close to the base with a pair of scissors until the styles are exposed. When the styles are fully grown, the upper surface or stigma is in condition to receive the pollen. Select the desired flower for pollen, push aside the ray florets or petals until the disc florets are in view; these produce the pollen which may be collected on a camel's-hair pencil or a toothpick, and then applied to the stigma of the flower previously prepared. If a toothpick is used, never use it for more than one kind of pollen. By allowing the camel's-hair pencil to stand in an open-mouthed vial of alcohol, a few moments after using, it may, when dry, be used upon another variety without fear of the pollen of the former operation affecting the present.

Pollenizing should be done on bright, sunny days as far as possible. In wet weather, a dry, warm house can be utilized, and the work continued each day, provided sufficient pollen is at hand. On bright days, pollen is generally very abundant, and may be collected, stored in vials and labeled ready for use. If kept perfectly dry, this pollen will retain its vitality throughout the chrysanthemum season.

After fertilization, give the plants only sufficient water to keep them from wilting. Always keep a record of the work, showing the parents of the seedlings. It will afford you pleasure to know how a meritorious variety was produced, and may suggest possibilities along other lines.

Seeds ripen in five to six weeks. Those fertilized early in the season give the greatest number of seeds, doubtless due to the weather being more favorable at that time. Do not anticipate superabundance of seed. The crosses which give but a few seeds generally produce the best seedlings. Hand pollenized seeds are of more value than those naturally fertilized. It at least seems rational to expect more from seed secured by the union of our best kinds than from that produced by the wind without intent—or the bee, whose only object is to secure his daily sustenance. If this be true, our results depend upon the degree of intelligence employed in the selection of parents, and the thoroughness with which every detail is attended to.

I CANNOT do without the REVIEW.—W. J. MILLER, Delevan, Wis.

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.

Xmas Outlook.

The warm weather of November has somewhat upset our calculations on the supply of blooms for Christmas. However, those varieties which are naturally late show prospects of furnishing a larger supply than anticipated.

Every grower will naturally give close attention to every detail necessary to bring out the largest possible amount of bloom at that time. I do not advise any rise of temperature any more than the lowering of it. On the one hand, you may get a few more blooms at the expense of quality and damage to plants, on the other a few forward ones may be held back, with the result of split calyxes later.

Every grower, of course, knows the conditions and requirements of his particular trade; but my experience has been that it is not good policy to cut closely at any time. After the holidays there is usually a scarcity of flowers, but by no means is there no demand. For this reason it is not best to cut everything in sight; besides, the Christmas price can be held for some time afterwards, resulting in no loss financially, at the same time keeping your plants healthy, they having had no severe check as is often the case with heavy cutting or forcing.

Salting.

In view of the fuel question, which affects all lines of trade, this year's holiday trade will necessitate some close figuring on the part of carnation growers. I venture to say that it will be a supreme test of the so-called salting process.

The flower-buying public are becoming more critical each year; this season they will be pretty careful to put their money on the winning horse, "Quality." It is useless for me to go into the details of salting, as you have all read more or less about it in past years, and in view of the fact that it is said the practice is decreasing, the less said the better.

I will close the subject with reference to a catching ad borrowed from Mother Goose Melodies, and which I have used with success:

The Three Grades.

"Carnations fresh, carnations old Carnations in the water nine days old."
Try some fresh ones.

CARNATION NOTES—WEST.

One of the troubles that is almost sure to strike you in a mild form or otherwise in the near future is the bursting of the calyxes on some of your varieties of carnations, and you should be very careful right along to avoid the conditions that cause this trouble. While the weather is bright, there is usually very little calyx splitting, but at this time of the year we are very apt to have an occasional dark and wet spell of weather, and during these is when the trouble most often breaks out. You should always have your carnations in such condition that you can control them at will in case of cloudy or sunny weather, and it sometimes takes a pretty level head to keep things as they should be.

A bad case of overwatering during dark weather will cause splitting. A too severe drying out at the roots during a bright spell will also cause splitting, so you see you always want to keep a happy medium, so that in case a cloudy spell sets in you can soon have your soil on the dry side by withholding the water, and in case of a warm, bright day you can by giving one good watering have your plants well supplied with the extra water they need on such a day. There is perhaps no plant that we grow that demands more regularity and uniformity in conditions than the carnation. The same may be said in regard to the food you give them. A too strong dose of food will cause splitting, while a severe case of starving will bring about the same result, so watch your plants carefully and give them what they need and no more.

The most frequent cause of splitting is an uneven temperature in the carnation houses, and it is the least excusable of the lot. Sometimes it may be a little unpleasant or inconvenient to get up steam for a few hours, and you think that a low temperature for a few hours will do no harm, as the plants seem to grow right along; or perhaps you are busy and can't look after the fire regularly, etc. There are many excuses to be found for such a condition of things, but none of them will justify the act. A temperature of 85 degrees during the day and 50 degrees at night will surely bring on a case of splitting, so watch your ventilators during the day; 60 to 70 degrees during the day is about right. Robbing the plants of too many cuttings at one time will often bring on the same trouble, with some varieties quicker than others, and you should bear this in mind when you take your cuttings. If you take only the cuttings from the flower stems you will seldom cause splitting.

You will find in almost every case of splitting that it came about through a check of one kind or another, and to avoid giving your plants a check is to prevent calyx splitting, if nothing worse. Some of our most valuable varieties will split as soon as something is not just right, and it pays us well to study the wants of each variety and grow it accordingly. The first year Mrs. Lawson was out most of us kept it at 50 degrees to begin with, but soon we found that that was too cool, because nearly every calyx would split in that temperature during the winter, and the temperature was raised until most of us now grow it at 54 to 56 degrees, and only a few calyxes split for us now. Ethel Crocker had the same experience, and so did Flora Hill a few years ago.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Christmas Plant Baskets.

I spoke last week of some combinations of plants for filling baskets of various sizes for Christmas sales. These baskets are of necessity quite low, but always with a handle, which gives a chance for some ribbon decoration. For some years I was inclined to think that only in the very largest cities were these baskets of plants salable, for they are expensive and cannot be very lasting, as proper care in watering cannot be given. Their durability is, however, not worth the florist troubling himself about. They are never, or hardly ever, purchased by the person to whose home they are going. They are beautiful; they appeal to the eye and the sense of beauty, and it occurs to the person with the congested purse who usually buys them (and it is because the inspiration moves them with that delightful thought), "How that pretty basket would delight Mrs. So and So."

In considering any scruples that may arise about their artificial arrangement or fleeting time of beauty, you have only to remember that they will outlast a vase of roses or any other flowers, and the customer gets a larger show for his money. In making up these baskets be sure that the ball of earth of each plant is thoroughly moist before it is put in. Wrap the ball of each plant in oiled paper, which will keep the earth moist for several days longer than it otherwise would. Then there is no occasion to have the sphagnum moss more than just moist in which you plunge the plants. Another plan, and this applies more to baskets filled with one kind of plant, is to fill the tin dish that lines the basket with earth, and put the plants in as you would in filling a fern dish. With careful watering this gives the plants a chance to exist far longer than when wrapped in oiled paper and plunged in moss, but it makes the basket very heavy and there is not much gained.

There is a chance to make many combinations, and it is no easy task to attempt to tell you just what plants will make an effective and pretty combination. The plants that you have at your command for this purpose at this season are by no means few. We have before us the small orange trees, azaleas, poinsettias, Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, Lilium Harrisii, cyclamen, primulas, ericas (familiarly called heather), narcissus (yellow and white), Roman hyacinths, lily of the valley. There may be a few others that I am not yet familiar with. The berried plants, ardisia and the solanum can be classed with flowering plants because they are high colored.

Flowering plants are by no means all that go to make these baskets handsome and attractive, for what would not the flower lose but for its natural setting of green. However brilliant and striking a mass of high color may be at first sight, the eye and senses soon tire of what is unnatural. Most of the plants we use have enough of their own foliage to afford a relief to their brighter flowers, yet the addition of foliage plants is of the greatest help in forming a pleasing and chaste combination, and here again we have a large field to select from. That ancient family, the ferns, gives us the nephrolepis, adiantums (of which the cuneatum is almost indispensable), Cibotium Schiedii, Cyrtomium falcatum, pteris of several species, and many small ferns such as we use in our small fern dishes. Small palms, particularly Kentia Belmoreana and Forsteriana, Areca lutescens, Cocos Weddeliana, Araucaria excelsa, Pandanus Veitchii. The latter in small sizes (from 12 to 18 inches high) will add a style to a basket more than any other plant I know of.

Let me digress just a moment, Mr. Editor, and mention a plant that is, I believe, not yet in commerce, but soon must be, and that is Pandanus Sanderi. This beautiful plant would be at a casual glance passed over as simply a well-colored P. Veitchii, but it is very different. There is a rich golden tinge about it that Veitchii does not possess, and when it can be bought by the commercial florist it will quickly displace the latter. A group of it at the Madison Square Garden, exhibited, of course, by Henry A. Dreer, attracted every one's attention. Another point greatly in favor of this beautiful plant is that it is not so liable to collapse under changes of temperature, or an excess of moisture as Veitchii, for good house plant as is the latter, it will, after months of good health and growth, suddenly dissolve. You may properly call it "heart failure." In fact Sanderi is a tougher plant. You will wonder why I am so well posted on this plant, being 436½ miles from its habitat. It's because I have kept myself posted on it.

"But to our tale," as Burns says in Tam o' Shanter. It's difficult to tell you what plants will make an attractive combination. You will not have all the plants mentioned at your command, but you will have enough to make some pleasing baskets. White goes with any color, and so does green. Pink and red together will suit the taste of few. Colors of the flowers of one genus rarely are at variance, and always please. While brilliancy of color where one kind of plant is used will be attractive and natural, in the mixed baskets use plenty of green foliage to distract from the varied forms and colors of widely different species, and avoid stiffness in outline and crowding. There are many people who will prefer a basket composed of one kind of plant, but not necessarily of one color. The primulas, cyclamen, begonia and poinsettia are all most attractive massed alone.

Now about the ribbons, quite an important part of these baskets. I am not especially a ribbon man, and inwardly protested against the over-profuse use of ribbon, which reached its climax a few years ago. A well-flowered azalea (let it be any variety) as a single plant cannot be enhanced in beauty by a lot of millinery. To cover the pot with pretty paper and ribbon is entirely admissible, and does not mar the beauty of the plant. With these baskets the case is entirely different. Had they not a handle they would look like a dinner table plateau and would never sell, and it is on the handle that the ribbon decoration is not only admissible but appropriate and even necessary. Tied with a liberal bow on top or side of handle, with its flowing ends mingling with the plants, is in this case as necessary as the moulding at the ceiling or the border in a papered room. Common sense will dictate the color of the ribbon. If on a mixed basket green or white alone are possible. If one color, such as poinsettia or begonia "Lorraine," then a shade identical with the color of the flowers is the thing. Nothing will be so pleasing as to decorate with ribbon as near as possible the shade of the flower. William Scott.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS IN THE SOUTH.

In a paper presented to the Chrysanthemum Society of America at the recent Chicago convention, Mr. F. P. Davis, of Mobile, Ala., says the modern chrysanthemum is yet a novelty in many parts of the extreme south. He says that few of the excellent varieties can expand their flowers under the influence of a tropic sun and that the controlling of the heat rather than the cold is the problem that confronts the southern grower. A robust variety that grows quickly from late planting is best, and in no variety is this quality so prominent as in the old Golden Gate.

A first-class flower cannot be grown without the protection of glass, or some sort of covering, as it must be guarded from rain and wind. Solid beds are better than benches, as they do not dry out so fast, and it is better to risk keeping them a little on the dry side as protection against mealy bug. Of course perfect drainage must be given, for which coarse gravel has been used with best results. No wood should be used about the beds, as they invite the destructive wood lice.

He advises southern growers to shun commercial fertilizers and prefers rotted cow manure and a light dusting of bone meal in the compost, and then trusts to ample nourishment at flowering time from copious waterings.

To combat the wood lice he sprays weak kerosene emulsion on the under side of the foliage; this pest (peculiar to the cotton growing states) being similar in habits to the red spider. The body is about the size of a fat black aphis, in color a dirty gray, and the wings stand out so as to give it the appearance of a woolly sheep. While the touch of kerosense is certain death to this insect, he has never known a house of plants to amount to much after it has once made a showing.

WINTERING BOX TREES.

I have about a dozen boxwood trees in tubs that were stored in a greenhouse last winter and became badly infested with red spider. Would it do to plunge them outdoors, covering the roots with strawy manure and this with pine boughs? Have no suitable cellar, and thermometer goes to 20 degrees below zero here. A. S. C.

New Hampshire.

The Tree Box is quite hardy in climates where the temperature does not go below 10 Fahrenheit, and that only occasionally. It should be cool in the winter months; still a greenhouse where the night temperature was about 40 to 45 would winter it very well, and there would be no occasion for red spider, because hand spraying once or twice a week would keep them down. A greenhouse is too valuable space to be occupied with box trees, sweet bays and the like, and if I had no building adapted to their winter care I should look around to see if I could not find a barn in the neighborhood that did not get too cold. Incidentally I must mention that two years ago I advised a wealthy customer to keep his sweet bays in his coach house adjoining his stable, which he did, and they wintered finely.

If no such place is available, then with a little labor you can winter the box trees out of doors.

Dig a trench in a dry spot a few inches wider than the tubs or pots and deep enough to let the tops of the tubs be a little below surface of ground. Fill in with dry stable litter or leaves between the tubs, which should be as close together as tops will allow. Then on each side with 1-inch boards build a wall a few inches away from the trees. Some clean, dry straw loosely pushed down among the trees will help, and a good lot of hemlock boughs thrown up against the outside of the boards will help to keep it warm. Don't cover the top of this primitive structure until very cold weather sets in, and then it can be hemlock boughs. When you put them in this trench, see that the soil in the tubs is moist or give them a good watering. They will stand the low temperature better if the roots are moist than if dry.

William Scott.

FORCING SPIRAEA.

About this time the imported clumps of spiræa will begin to be distributed among the growers, and the treatment given them after their unpacking is responsible for a good deal of the success or failure in forcing.

As soon as unpacked those that are required for early use should be potted and placed either in a frame, where the temperature can be maintained at about 55 degrees, or put under a light, airy bench in a house run at that temperature until root action is well started, when they should be placed on a bench where they can have full sunshine and free ventilation with a night temperature of 60 degrees, which can gradually be raised to 65 degrees if the flowers are wanted early.

To keep up a succession of blooms a fresh batch should be potted every two weeks. With clumps from cold storage a succession of bloom can be had throughout the year.

As Easter falls on April 12, 1903, the clumps required at that season should be potted the last week of January, as they require about ten weeks in a temperature of 60 degrees to fully develop. By growing them along steadily at this temperature they develop better flowers and have more luxuriant foliage than if they are heavily forced or too much retarded.

The one great requisite in forcing spiræa successfully is to see that they never on any occasion suffer for want of water, as this is fatal. They are also very impatient of the fumes of tobacco, and should either be grown in a house that requires no fumigating or removed from it during that operation.

Whilst revelling in an abundance of fresh air, they do not relish a draught and if frequently exposed to it the leaves will get rusty, which effectually spoils the appearance of the plants and detracts very much from their value.

They succeed well in a compost of three parts fibry loam and one part well decomposed manure, with a sprinkling of sand to keep it porous and sweet. When the flower stems begin to appear they can use with advantage a soaking of manure water once a week.

The varieties most suited for forcing are Astilboides floribunda, Japonica floribunda, Japonica compacta multiflora and some of the new varieties, such as Gladstone, which when well handled makes a magnificent specimen.

To successfully store the imported clumps they should be buried in a dry situation and covered with either ashes or sand and should be moistened before being covered. Ribes.

NEW YORK.

Trade Conditions.

The week opened with bright, clear, freezing weather. It was 31¾ degrees Monday. Everybody looks happier since Thanksgiving and both wholesalers and retailers have much to be thankful for. The prices realized for fancy stock were exceptional for so early in the season. Some grand Maids and Brides touched 20 cents. Beauties are ambitious enough to demand $7 per dozen, and some special violets, in bunches of 100, actually refused to budge for less than $3 per bunch, but such values were few and far between. Still the trend of prices is now upward, and there is little danger of any recessions until after the holidays.

The chrysanthemum has realized that its days are over. A few of the late varieties still grace the windows of the retailers, but there is a general willingness to "speed the parting guest." The orchid maintains its place at the head of the procession. It still seems to be society's favorite at the opera; though now that the violet is disappearing from the street merchant's display, and its value has become prohibitive for general use, immense bunches may again grace the corsages of the "400."

Items.

Next Friday sees the folding of the auction tents for the season. Mr. Elliott says it has been a "strenuous year" with values low and enthusiasm stagnant. Still in the aggregate it compares favorably with other years, and doubtless when the robins nest again business will go on as usual at the old stand.

John A. Scollay, of Brooklyn, is very busy these days with a force of fifty placing his boilers in the ranges of A. Whiting at Hartford, Conn., and H. C Williams, of East Hartford. He reports one of the best fall seasons in the history of the house.

Hicks & Crawbuck find their departure from the beaten track and their enterprise in establishing wholesale stores in both cities is bearing fruit. They have some great Bride and Maid growers on their list, some specials of these varieties actually bringing as high as 20 cents for Thanksgiving.

Reidel & Co., the latest arrivals in the ranks of the wholesalers, have a neat store fitted up for staying purposes and very convenient. They make, as a special feature of their "good intentions," the promise of a "strictly wholesale business."

Mr. Gunther, the violet specialist, has completed improvements that give him one of the best and most commodious stores in the district. He is evidently ready for a repetition of the times when he sold over 200,000 violets in a day, and he "expects to do it again."

Mr. Saltford, on the same street, whose book on "How to Grow Violets" has given him much creditable notoriety, reports a fine Thanksgiving and a steady rise in violet values. His best stock brought $2 per 100 easily. He has many of the best Duchess county growers in his "repertoire."

Charles Millang will soon be dispensing lilies, but just now he is developing great ability as a "plantsman," his sales of plants from his new conservatory far exceeding his expectations.

Alex. Guttman's record price of 75 cents each for Maids and Brides last Easter has not been excelled, but some stock from the same grower last week easily brought 15 cents, and the stock was superb.

Moore, Hentz & Nash "cannot get enough Queen of Edgley," they say, and the price for specials crowds the Beauty hard. A lot of 250 fine ones sold for $100 last week, and 50 cents each was the price in smaller quantities.

This firm has been one of the most persistent in "shaking up" the express companies for exorbitant shipping rates, especially the Essex division of the D. L. & W. These railways have been making a wonderful show of generosity in the raising of the wages of their employes, and have quietly evened up matters by adding to their shipping rates more than enough to cover all their apparent liberality. The florists have, however, found a remedy in the use of the corrugated paper boxes manufactured by the Sefton Co., of Chicago, and the extreme lightness of these and the strength which enables them to be taken apart, packed in bulk and used over and over again, has surely circumvented the R. R. and "put the shoe on the other foot" with a vengeance.

Ernst Asmus is away on his annual hunting trip and the moose will again have to suffer. Don't see any more room in his residence for "trophies." Guess he must intend to decorate that new 300-foot U bar greenhouse at "Asmusiana" with them.

J. F. McConnell is kept hustling nowadays at the "Exchange" with Louis A. Noe's fine 12-cent Maids and Brides. He says he does not handle anything but "extras."

Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Weber, St. Louis, on the 25th Anniversary of their Marriage.

B. Slinn, Jr., in the Coogan building, is headquarters just now for sweet peas, his supply going to the big stores on Broadway.

Upstairs in this building Frank Millang, Chas. Smith, Bonnot Bros. and W. H. Siebrecht form a quartette of hustlers that find it profitable to cater to the trade from 6 to 6 daily.

The market is growing in interest and numbers constantly. There will have to be accommodations for the overflow before long. The whole upper floor of the Coogan establishment is "in the market," and some enterprising optimist will find its lease a profitable venture.

Reed & Keller, Hermann, Geller and Kresbover are up to their eyes in business. The demand for Christmas goods is phenomenal. There is a great demand for Reed & Keller's new torchere palm stands for decorations.

J. K. Allen's Thanksgiving trade was above the average of years. The "Pioneer" is in robust health and the "turkey and cider" seems to have "touched the spot."

John Foley, at Bradshaw & Hartman's had a narrow escape from pneumonia last week, but is "on deck" again.

The carnation exhibition at John Young's would make the Madison Square show "turn green with envy." His growers are among the best in the land, and not a fancy variety but can be found here every day.

The club meeting next Monday promises to be "lively." It will be held at 128 E. Twenty-eighth street, as usual, and a large attendance is assured.

Small had two important decorations last week. The Saxe wedding, at the Waldorf-Astoria, where the whole floor of the hotel was decorated, including the grand ball room, the west and east foyer and the Astor gallery. And on Thanksgiving the Strauss-Abrahams wedding, an event of great importance in the highest Jewish circles, and in both events the best kind of floral and artistic work was accomplished under the able management of Arthur Merritt.

Mr. J. Purdy has purchased the wholesale business of M. Hart, of 48 West Thirtieth street, and has associated his brother with him, the new firm to be known as Purdy Bros. It is possible Mr. Hart may try his hand at the retail business.

Mrs. McNeice is probably the only lady wholesale florist in this country. Her daughter is associated with her, and their store at 42 West Twenty-seventh street is devoted to "novelties," and is New York's headquarters for orange blossoms, camellias, forget-me-nots, white and single violets, acacias, etc. They have as fine a grade of single violets as can be found anywhere, and are preparing for a large Christmas demand. If you don't know, or can't find what you want in the novelty line of floriculture, ask Mrs. McNeice about it. If she can't find it, it isn't!

C. H. Joosten will have a fine imported stock of holly trees, standard box and evergreens for the holidays. They arrived by steamer Monday after a tempestuous voyage.

A rumor says that a bachelor horticulturist of national repute contemplates an "important change" in the near future. But there are so many "bachelors" between Twenty-eighth street and the Battery who ought not to be, it's hard figuring out which one has been "converted." Perhaps Mr. Elliott can tell us.

The retiring president of the Florists' Club, Mr. Sheridan, has made a splendid presiding officer and joins the "rank and file" with "honors thick upon him." His record endears him to his associates. His successor will have to "keep awake."

Traendly & Schenck were the fortunate possessors of those fancy, 100 in a bunch, $3 violets. They were as fine as ever reached the New York market.

Ed. Horan looks very cozy in his new store, and is "quite comfortable" again.

John Raynor finds the demand for "Peter Crowe" quite beyond the supply and the popularity of our fat friend in Utica and his namesake grow continuously.

The Flatbush boys had their annual turkey bowling night last Thursday. As a consequence there were turkey dinners at the Dailledouze's, Zeller's and Siebrecht's, and the "also rans" were obliged to partake of "crow," though the victors did not crow unduly over their success. There is always "something doing" at the Flatbush bowling club on Thursday evenings.

The New York club's "start" has had many obstacles thrown in its way, but it is not a "quitter" and with associate membership, the return of the "country contingent" and a few such scores as those of last Monday evening the old time enthusiasm will soon materialize.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

MR. AND MRS. F. C. WEBER.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred C. Weber, St. Louis, recently celebrated their silver wedding, and as a memento of the occasion had the protograph taken from which the accompanying engraving was made.

All in the trade who have met the genial Mr. Weber and his charming wife —and they are many—will join with us in extending hearty congratulations and in asking early invitations to the golden wedding that all feel sure will follow in due time.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY OF AMERICA.

At the exhibition of the C. S. A., held jointly with the Horticultural Society of Chicago, Nov. 11 to 15, 1902, the following varieties were exhibited.

Yellow Eaton, exhibited by The E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., scored 89 points commercial scale. R. E. Richardson, pink, by same exhibitors, scored 92 points. Columbia, also by same exhibpoints. Columbia, pink, also by same exhibitors, scored 90 points. Golden Chadwick, exhibited by J. C. Vaughan, Chicago, Ill., scored 89 points.

Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich., exhibited the following: H. W. Buckbee, yellow, which scored 92 points; Mrs. J. J. Mitchell, cream color, scored 90; Minnie Bailey, pink, scored 90.

The judges were Messrs. John F. Cowell and Emil Buettner.

Chicago, Nov. 22.—Jacob Schulz, Louisville, Ky., exhibited a sport from Merry Christmas, dull white, tips of petals yellow, incurved, which scored 60 points commercial scale.

EDWIN LONSDALE.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Flowers were extremely scarce Thanksgiving and have become even scarcer since then. Prices have been steadily advancing and today some flowers are bringing more money than ever before during first week of December. Thanksgiving day pretty well cleaned up the chrysanthemums; they are now the exception rather than the rule in the stores. The demand for red roses and carnations and for violets was very heavy. Nearly all the dealers were obliged to cut their orders severely for these flowers, especially violets. Since Thanksgiving there have been some heavy orders. The Army and Navy football game last Saturday cleaned up every violet in sight and many other flowers besides; chrysanthemums were a rarity that night. Sunday was a big day with some of the wholesalers. Beauties were in great demand. The opening of congress in Washington on Monday morning and the first German in Baltimore on Monday night carried off great quantities of choice stock. Valley has been a great seller; Leo Niessen received 20,000 last week. The local demand continues active; everything choice is eagerly accepted.

Review of the Coal Market.

We are entering on a month of great activity in our business. People have money and are willing to spend it for our product. The most serious menace to our prosperity is the uncertainty of getting plenty of good fuel, and its price. In view of these facts a brief review of the fuel question may be of interest.

Most of the florists in and near this city have been burning buckwheat coal. The price of this size in the summer of 1901 was about $2.35 a ton on the tracks, or about 30 cents a ton more than the year before. When the great coal strike just ended in the anthracite mines had lasted well into the summer, many of our growers, realizing that their bins must be filled, began buying soft coal. The price of soft coal, normally about $2.95 a ton, advanced rapidly during September, and, to make matters worse, the orders sent in hesitatingly at first were only partially filled. Then the growers got scared and ordered freely. By this time the big manufacturers had changed their plants so as to burn soft coal, and were ordering, and very heavily, too. The price of soft coal advanced throughout October and November until today it costs about three times as much as under ordinary conditions.

Since the close of the strike in the anthracite regions conditions have slightly improved. The demand for domestic sizes of hard coal is away ahead of the supply, but the small sizes can be had at fair prices considering the circumstances. Buckwheat coal is selling today at $3 a ton on the tracks; it is not to be lower this season and our growers are buying freely.

There are two curious features in connection with the coal famine that should give food for thought. The first is the jockeying done by some of the coal dealers during the fall, by which they forced their florist customers to buy at top prices and then ran in many delayed cars on them all at once. This lesson will never be forgotten. The second point is the curious difference in price of coal on the two railroads supplying this market, the growers in the district supplied by the Philadelphia & Reading being able to buy buckwheat coal at 75 cents a ton less than their competitors in the Pennsylvania section of country.

A Wholesaler's View.

Samuel S. Pennock was asked to give his views for the Review's readers on the outlook for the season. He thinks that business throughout the fall has shown a remarkable amount of life and activity. Quantities of flowers have been coming in until last week, yet there has at no time been a cessation in the demand. Nearly all the good stock was sold at fair prices. Conditions have changed and stock is less plentiful, with an increased demand as the winter season opens. The prospects for an extraordinarily large business are very bright.

Death of James Harris.

James Harris, second son of William K. Harris, died Monday night, the funeral taking place Friday. Mr. Harris has the deep sympathy of his many warm friends, who grieve with him for the loss of his son.

A Box Party and a Banquet.

The daily papers are fond of giving their readers graphic accounts of an entertainment which they have that instant left. So the Review, not to be outdone, offers its readers an account of a party which they can read while the party is actually in progress!

The firm of Pennock Bros. gave a delightful box party at Keith's Theater, Saturday evening, December 6, which was followed by a supper at Boothby's. Among those present were: J. Liddon Pennock and Benjamin Starkey, of Pennock Bros.; John McIntyre and Ernest Frame, of Edward Reid's; Ralph Shegley, of S. S. Pennock's; A. G. Campbell, who is with Leo Niessen; Eugene Bernheimer; William J. Moore; Paul J. Klingporn, who is with George M. Moss; Fred Sheskey, who is with Robert Craig & Son; a representative of George Anderson, William Stevens, of John Burton's; Samuel Lilly, who is with Eugene Weiss, and several others. To quote:

"You may hunt the world all over
As carefully as you please,
But in spite of all your trouble
You will find no men like these."

The evening is bound to be a great success.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club held its December meeting on Tuesday evening at Horticultural Hall. The feature of the occasion was Edwin Lonsdale's review of the newer chrysanthemums. Phil.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Yes, there was a "jump" for Thanksgiving! It affected everything a little; cheap goods particularly, and chrysanthemums very slightly, as there were enough of them to fill all demands and they will rule for many a day yet!

In former years Thanksgiving has only panned out about like a real good Saturday's business, but this year it was built more on the lines of a mimic Christmas. This may have simply seemed so because roses and carnations were scarce, but I think there was also a substantial growth of trade for the day.

Prices have held their position ever since, and are quoted in our list in another column. There is no cause to hope for anything lower until the days grow much longer. J. S. Manter.

BUFFALO.

Thanksgiving was a miserable, sloppy day, but it did not very much affect business, which was quite up to the average. Chrysanthemums kept up their popularity, and the demand for them cleaned up the remnants in many places, and it will be only occasionally that they will be asked for from now on. It appears to us that not for years has there been such a wide interest taken in the Queen of Autumn. Not only have the trade journals finely reported and illustrated the exhibitions, but there have been many valuable contributions to the literature of the chrysanthemum by acknowledged specialists; and it's entirely our own fault if we are not well posted in what varieties to grow. I think the article in your column of last week by Brian Boru particularly instructive and reliable, and that copy of the Review should be put away for future reference, and there were several others.

Colder weather and more fire heat has improved the quality of all varieties of roses. Violets are in good demand. The single Princess of Wales may not be as profitable to grow as the double varieties, for, as was remarked by that wise Mr. Wise, of East Aurora, a few days ago, "They are big sprawley growers and take up lots of room." Yet it is much better to be producing a few hundred of these every day than to make a failure with the double; and a bunch of 100 Princess of Wales, with their 10-inch stems, is about irresistible to the patron who happens to see them.

Carnations are commanding a good price, and now that mums are mostly gone they are in great demand. Once more I must with pleasure allude to that interesting review of varieties of carnations in last week's issue, and as I happen to grow a few of almost all the kinds he mentions, it was read with interest, and his experience I would indorse almost without exception. Her Majesty, a few of which I was favored with a trial, will surely knock out Lorna, Norway and White Cloud, and perhaps some of the newer whites. Its habit and prolificness are fine. Old Ethel Crocker is behaving better than ever, but it has 55 degrees at night. Mrs. Nelson is all right in every way. Stella is a beautiful variegated, and Mrs. Potter Palmer is a wonderfully free scarlet with good stem and large flower, but until Adonis makes its debut to the general public we shall continue to grow lots of the beautiful Estelle, which improves in health and vigor each year. Harry Fenn, one of Mr. Ward's new crimsons, is sending up a great lot of long, strong stems and is a beautiful shade.

The firm known as Bullock & Co., at 479 Main street, which succeeded W. A. Adams, who evaporated last spring, has now sold out to Mr. Thomas Coleman. Mr. Coleman is a window-dresser for the department store of the H. A. Meldrum Co., and as 479 is directly opposite the department house it is probable that Tommy can run both jobs. He has a fine hand for handling both flowers and the ribbons behind a span of 2:20 trotters. W. S.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Thanksgiving trade was about the same as in former years. The wholesalers were fairly well supplied and are well satisfied with the prices and the amount sold.

The supply of first-class stock in roses was light and the quality hardly up to the average. American Beauties were very scarce but of good quality, and, as usual, in brisk demand at top prices. These sold as high as $12 per dozen at the retail stores. Brides and Maids were the only roses that were quite plentiful. Red and yellow roses were short in supply, as were Golden Gates and Carnots.

In carnations the supply was about equal to the demand. A few lots were left over, owing to the fact that some of the growers indulged in pickling. The demand was heaviest for red and pink, and as the quality was very good, the trade was compelled to ask 75 cents and $1 for them. The demand for these colors at the retail stores was heavy.

Violets were short in supply, even shorter than was anticipated, and the price was forced up from the quotation given.

Chrysanthemums were quite plentiful, except in first-class stock, which was in active demand and went at good, stiff prices.

Romans and paper whites were in fine demand and of fair quality with prices at the regular market quotations. Some good valley and stevia were seen, which sold well. All kinds of greens had a good call.

The West End florists say that house plants are moving better, and that from now on until after the holidays there should be a good demand for this class of stock, of which Messrs. Sanders, Windler, Schray and Beyer are well supplied for the holiday trade. The wholesale men, all of whom do a good shipping trade, report a large business in this line and quite an increase over last year.

Club Meeting.

The members of the club should not forget that the December meeting will take place next Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock, and as the meetings of late have been very interesting and instructive, a large attendance is expected. The two December essays will be read—one by President Dunford on "Greenhouse Construction" and the other by A. Jablonsky on "Experience with Carnations on Benches and Solid Beds and Best Results." Dr. Halstedt and R. J. Mohr have also promised to read their essays which were left over from the last meeting. The final vote on changing the hour from 3 to 2 p. m. will take place. This being the last meeting of the year, the attendance should be large, as those one-time-a-year members are likely to be on hand.

Notes.

George Ostertag was in a very happy frame of mind the past week. George says it's a boy; nine pounds, full weight and a regular Sandow.

William Ellison came down from Chicago last week to help the folks out for Thanksgiving day work. He will return this week as buyer for the house.

Emil Schray, having a worried look on his face, was asked the cause of it. He replied that he had a pair of twins at his place, which fairly took my breath for a moment, when he finished by saying they formerly belonged to Frank Fillmore. I couldn't quite understand; when finally I saw Fillmore's twin boilers standing in a shed not far off. This is too good to keep from the boys.

At a meeting of the city council of Belleville on Monday night Alex. S. Halstedt was elected mayor of Belleville to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mayor Hay, who was elected county judge of St. Clair County. Mayor Halstedt is a member of the St. Louis Florists' Club, and the head of the St. Clair Floral Co., of Belleville. The members of the club are with me in congratulating Mr. Halstedt and the people of Belleville on their selection.

League Bowlers.

The florist bowlers in the St. Louis tenpin league are doing quite well. The Bankers, of which Arthur Ellison is a member, rolled a 1,036 game last week. They are second in the race. Sturtz, Kuehn and Benecke, of the Uniems, are also holding their own with good averages. Carl Beyer, in the Western league, is rolling some big games, and the prospects for a tiptop team at Milwaukee next summer are good.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Thanksgiving business proved to be record-breaking, and general satisfaction is the result. There was a fine lot of stock to be had, and enough for all orders, with the exception of Beauties and fancy carnations. The florists in the Jabez Elliott Flower Market have another story, though. They had saved up their stock and had come to the market expecting to do a very large business, which they undoubtedly would have done had not a cold, drizzling rain set in early in the morning, which quickly settled things for them. They report trade as very poor. The flower buyers did not leave their homes unless they were compelled to do so, so the telephones in the retail stores did the rest.

Carnations, in all grades, are very short, and there are not enough to fill all orders.

Roses are helping things along, by being in very good supply, there being plenty in all grades to fill all orders. The quality is Al. Liberties are very good, and are the most sought after. Golden Gates are meeting with popular favor in this market. Some very fine ones are being offered. Long-stemmed Beauties are unequal to the demand, though the supply is gradually increasing. Short-stemmed ones are in much better supply, and there are about as many of them as can be used at present.

Chrysanthemums are almost out of the market. There is yet an active demand for them, and good ones would bring a very good price.

There is a heavy demand for good violets, and not nearly enough to go around. Lily of the valley is in good demand, but rather scarce just at present. Some good Harrisii lilies are to be had; also longiflorum, which sell very well.

Notes.

The long-looked-for but slow-arriving freeze made its appearance here Sunday night, when the thermometer dropped to 22 degrees, which will put an end to the outdoor stock.

The large exhibition greenhouse that is being erected in Eden Park is fast nearing completion. Mr. Critchell, the superintendent, has just taken out a patent on a new clipper sash bar, and is using it exclusively on the new house. It is a contrivance which does away entirely with putty; a rubber strip above and below the edge of the glass to keep out all moisture, and a wood strip, grooved, to fit into the bar, being firmly screwed down, holding the glass in place and pressing tightly against the rubber strips.

R. A. Kelly has put in his application for membership in the Graball Club, of which Julius Baer is chief potentate roaster and Charlie Jones is aroma distributer.

F. W. Ball says that he is highly satisfied with his first week in the retail business, and that his trade was much better than he had anticipated.

S. S. Skidelsky, of Philadelphia, and Ed. Bissel, of Dayton, Ohio, were visitors. C. J. Ohmer.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Since Thanksgiving trade has averaged very good, though the market was quiet on Tuesday. There is sufficient demand to take up all good stock coming in and there is a marked shortage in the supply of Beauties and violets, with none too many good carnations. The shortage in violets is very noticeable after the surplus of last week. Prices are well maintained, especially on the select grades. Most of the Beauty growers seem to be off crop at present, but we hear that several anticipate fine crops in for Christmas.

In carnations there are a few fancy Prosperity that reach $8.00, and on the other hand there are some low-grade flowers that are sold at as low as $1.00, but the great bulk of the stock is moved at the quotations given in our list.

Beginning next Monday, the price of hardy ferns will be $2.00 per 1,000.

Kennicott Bros. Co. are receiving some very fine violets from a small grower that sell quickly at $2.00 per 100.

Notes.

The sad news comes from Alma, Mich., that the physicians attending Mrs. C. L. Washburn at the sanitarium there have given up hope of her recovery. Both Mr. Washburn and Mr. Bassett, Mrs. Washburn's father, are at her bedside.

A. C. Kohlbrand is again at his post at E. C. Amling's after a two weeks' illness.

Matthew Weber, foreman of the carnation section at Peter Reinberg's, died last Friday, of pneumonia, aged 35 years. He leaves a widow and three children. He had been with Mr. Reinberg about seven years. He was a genial, companionable man, as well as an able grower, and the news of his death will be heard with deep regret by many friends in the trade.

A few chrysanthemum stragglers are seen in the market, but the reign of the Queen of Autumn is practically over for this year.

Leaden skies and a fall of mixed rain and snow was the program Tuesday and Wednesday.

Edgar Sanders continues to improve and is now able to take a few steps almost without assistance. He is cheery and hopeful.

Mr. O. L. Baird, Dixon, Ill., was a recent visitor.

BALTIMORE.

Market Conditions.

The past week has seen a marked change in the weather and in the trade conditions of this center. Of seven days we have had five of heavy downpours or sullen clouds, varied with cold nights, when the thermometer marked 26 degrees, the lowest so far reached. As a result flowers have been scarce even for the season.

Saturday last found the trade panicky over the likelihood of a failure of the American Beauty and violet crops. The great Army and Navy football game at Philadelphia on that day cleared up all contiguous markets and left a blank outlook for the demands of today (Dec. 1) of this city, when the event of the year, the first German of the Bachelors' cotillion, constitutes high-water mark of the smart social set. This is the occasion of the introduction of the season's debutantes, and the popularity of each is indicated by the number of bouquets she receives. The demand for flowers of the best grades may be judged of. By a liberal use of 'phone and wire most of the florists succeeded in securing from abroad enough for their requirements, but there is no surplus and prices rule high.

Generally, stuff is advancing in the face of many weddings and other social functions, the promise of an unusually brilliant season being, it is proclaimed, very marked. Hardly a day last week that demand did not exceed visible supplies. Violets are especially short, and good roses on some days were out of the market. Today has been one of bright sunshine, and a clear, crisp atmosphere, and with a continuance of these favorable conditions improvement in production is to be expected.

Items.

The fuel problem continues vexatious. Some of our growers are dependent upon precarious supplies. The arrivals of coal are irregular and prices are uncertain, but always certain to be almost extortionate. We heard of one man who today paid $9.50 a ton for a carload of hard coal. Soft coal, which ought, from the nearness of the mines, to be abundant and reasonable, is about as hard to get as the anthracite. We believe the oil burners, which were put in here in the hope that that fuel would prove an effective substitute for coal, have all been laid aside as impracticable, either failing to produce a high enough temperature or ruinously prodigal of oil. If prices of flowers advance with cost of production there must be a mark-up along the whole line.

Fredk. C. Bauer, of Govanstown, is sending in a new variegated carnation, yellow and carmine, of brilliant and pleasing shades, with good-sized flowers and stiff stems, and said to be very productive.

The decorations of the hall of the German tonight were done by Black Bros., who have a celebrity for tasteful and effective work in this line. B.

Seed Trade News.

PHILADELPHIA.—Henry F. Michell reports that the crop of edible pea seed will be fully 25 per cent short this season. Wax beans are likely to be 20 per cent short, green beans 30 per cent, celery and lettuce 50 per cent, while only 10 per cent of the orders for cucumber seed are likely to be forthcoming. This shortage is due to the unusually cold, wet summer, which proved most disastrous to the ripening of the seed of the above varieties. Advices from European seed growers promise no relief from that quarter. Many orders are already booked by local houses for next season's delivery. Indications point to high prices with a probable scarcity in some lines.

ST. JOSEPH, MO.—The Chesmore-Eastlake Mer. Co. says: "There was quite a large quantity of timothy shipped to eastern markets from this city and millet and cane are beginning to come in. There are prospects of being a good supply of millet, cane and Kaffir. From present indications millet will be damaged to some extent on account of the wet season through the fall. If there is any bright seed on the market it has not yet developed. Clover is very short and there will be only a few small lots offered for sale by the farmers. We think that this market will have to be supplied entirely by the east. At the same time there are some chances for later developments. Prospects for good trade and prices in the garden seed line are very good and we think there will be a heavy spring business in all lines of field and garden seeds."

A NEW FODDER PLANT.—Mr. S. H. Downs, of the Downs Seed & Grain Co., Topeka, Kan., believes the new fodder plant, Penicillaria Zeaoides, will take the place of all other fodder plants, especially in western Kansas, on account of its remarkable productiveness and drought resisting qualities. It is of the Pearl millet family, but far more productive. The fodder is much like corn or Kaffir corn. Mr. Downs has grown from two seeds a bunch of fodder consisting of 35 stalks three feet long, in sixty days, then a second crop thirty inches long from the roots in twenty-seven days, and a third crop five feet long from the same roots, cut September 15. He says that during the extreme heat of July of last year it grew and flourished as though it had been irrigated. This drought resistance will, he thinks, make the plant invaluable in many sections.

CANARY SEED.—The U. S. Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York has decided that canary seed is not entitled to free entry. In the case decided, upon appeal, the collector had assessed the canary seed for duty at 30 per cent ad valorem as "seeds not specially provided for." The importers protested and the board of general appraisers sustained the claim that canary seed was a grass seed and free of duty. Judge Townsend held that by omitting the word "canary" in paragraph 656 of the last law it must be assumed that congress intended that canary seed should be classified for duty.

THE final clean up of vine seed would indicate an average yield of 15 per cent of cucumbers, 25 to 50 per cent of muskmelons and nearly a full crop of watermelons. This is hard on the dealer, who finds it impossible to buy more or fill orders, but doubly hard on the grower who has contracted his crop in advance and gets no more per pound than in a year of plenty.

THE MEASURE now pending in Congress to supplant the present money order system by what is known as the Post Check system, which has already been described in these columns, is commended in an article in the July number of the North American Review, by Hon. H. A. Castle, auditor for the U. S. P. O. Department.

FOREIGN SEEDS are very slow in moving forward this season, very few importations of 1902 crop having been received. The delay is said to be due to a cold, backward season making the harvest late and to wet weather during the threshing and curing period.

THERE seems to be a plentitude of Liliums Harrisii and longiflorum. The representative of one Chicago house recently offered 7 to 9 Harrisiis to Philadelphia florists at $25.00 per 1,000.

MR. J. COMONT, representing James Carter, Dunnett & Beale, recently passed through Philadelphia on his way home. This was his first trip as far west as the Pacific coast.

HUBBARD SQUASH is a "short" item. This old and valuable variety still seems to be the leader in winter squashes.

The crisp air, the opening of the opera season, the comparative scarcity of the best stock, have all combined to lift the market to its feet and start it on its winter journey. Special Beauties have climbed to 60 cents, novelty carnations, even as high as 8 cents and violets, the finest, touched $2.50 a hundred. Everything is on the up grade. J. A. S.

Chrysanthemums are about all gone; a few stragglers are showing up yet. Every grower of roses is about off crop, but all indications point to a heavy and very fine Christmas crop. American Beauties are still very much sought after. Maids, Brides and Meteors are very good, but not enough to go around. Carnations are very fine and today there is very little poor stock in this market, all bringing satisfactory prices. Short white for funeral work is very much sought after. Poinsettias are coming in and are extra good. Paper whites are much sought for funeral work. Violets are very fine. Our best are Farquhar and Louise. The weather has been very fine up to date and all indications point to a fine holiday trade. Ground pine is beginning to move. Calls are coming in for holly and Xmas decorations.

MINNEAPOLIS.

Among the Growers.

It has been several years since I visited the Mendenhall greenhouses in Minneapolis, but I found little trouble in locating them on First avenue and Eighteenth street. A year ago last August hail did $6,000 worth of damage here to buildings alone, besides ineulculable damage to stock, but everything has been rebuilt, and save the absence of some fine specimen palms and ferns the place looks as it did a half dozen years ago. Robt. Tomlin is in charge and conducted me through the large range. In roses some old time and useful varieties were met. Like the proprietor, they are growing old and being old friends together they are not discarded. Belle Siebrecht, which was so vigorously "marched up the hill and then marched down again" several years since, smiles sweetly here. It is a most beautiful variety, but like its reputation does not last. Mme. Hoste and The Queen are also grown for funeral and design work. For these purposes they are very desirable. In the palm section a fine lot of young Kentia Belmoreana, grown from seed, was noted, also some fine Cycas revoluta grown from stems procured last season. One house was well filled with Boston ferns in prime condition. A few specimen plants of Nephrolepis Wittboldii were also seen, showing their great value for decorative purposes.

Everything in the line of plants and flowers is grown at this mammoth establishment. Another range of 22 houses is located on the outskirts of the city and will be deseribed in a future letter.

Plants for the Holidays.

You make a mistake if you buy Araucaria Excelsa from some other firm as it is impossible for any other firm to give you such value for the money as we can. Why? Because we make a specialty of them: filling our houses in early April with the best to be found in Europe, raised from top cuttings only. All must be sold before Christmas to make room for Easter plants.

5½ to 6-in. pot, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24 up to 26 inches high, 3-4-5 tiers, 70c, 75c, 80c, 90c and $1.00. Our specimens are perfect beauties, as broad as long; 6-in. pots, 5-6 tiers, very large, and only $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 to $1.75 each.

Azaleas for Xmas, in bud and bloom, are showing color now and will be right for Xmas. Only large healthy plants are forced successfully (no small ones). Vervaeneana, Simon Mardner (dbl. pink), and Deutsche Perle (white), 60c, 75c and $1.00 each.

Kentias Belmoreana and Forsteriana, 3 to 4 years old, first-class stock only from 25 to 36 inches high, 6-in. pots, only 75c to $1.00.

Ficus Elastica, 6-in. pots, $3.00, $4.00 and $5.00 per doz. Specimens, 36 inches, $6.00 per doz.

Chinese Primroses, 5-in. pots, in bud and bloom, large beautiful plants, $1.80 per doz.; 4-in. pots, large bushy plants $7.00 per 100.

Calla Lilies, 6-in., 25 inches high, 20c.

Dracaena Bruanti, 25 inches high green and full of leaves from top to bottom, $3.00 per doz.

Begonias in variety, 6-in. pots, $3.00 per doz.; 4-in. $1.20 per doz.

PITTSBURG.

Within the last week activity in the flower market has been more pronounced than it has been for some time, and the florists are sanguine that business will be good for the balance of the year. At this writing the market is very steady, with a sufficient supply of roses, carnations, Roman hyacinths, violets and valley to meet the demands.

Chrysanthemums bade us adieu on Thanksgiving day, for which both retailers and growers were thankful. We are all glad to see them come in, in the fall, and twice glad to see them go. Harrisii lilies and paper white narcissus are now to be had in quantities. These fill any shortage caused by the disappearance of mums.

Prices for Thanksgiving averaged about the same as a year ago. The general report is that business was better than the year previous, and had the weather conditions been more favorable business would have, undoubtedly, gone on record as a winner.

Maids and Brides sold at retail, from $1 to $3 per doz. Carnations, 75 cents to $1.25 per doz. Violets, 75 cents to $2 per bunch. Chrysanthemums, $2 to $6 per doz. Roman hyacinths and paper white narcissus, 50 cents to 75 cents per doz.

The first real fall of "the beautiful" occurred in this vicinity last Sunday, November 30.

The condition of stock in this section looks very promising for a good crop for Christmas. Growers are gradually becoming wiser; repeated experiences having taught them that it is folly to hold any quantity of stock beyond a reasonable time, preceding a holiday.

Wm. Diamond is in charge of L. I. Neff's store at Homestead, Pa.

Hoo-Hoo.

BUTTE, MONT.

Business was considerably injured by the recent political contest, which temporarily disorganized the social world, but normal conditions have returned and we are all busy. In addition to flowers for luncheons and dinners, funeral work has been in steady demand, as usual here. In addition to natural deaths there have been some shooting affairs that have kept us busy. At the funeral of Dr. Cayley, who was killed several weeks ago, there were two large carriages filled with designs. One was the largest ever seen here. It was a large panel, 7x5 feet, on an easel, made for the Fraternal Order of Eagles. It was arranged by the Butte Floral Co. A picture is sent you.

The Butte Floral Co. gave its second annual chrysanthemum show and opening recently and Senator Clark and some eastern visitors said the blooms and their arrangement excelled those at New York. The blooms were arranged among oriental decorations with beautiful electric light effects. An orchestra concealed behind a bank of mums rendered a popular program. The show was attended by crowds of visitors. Society turned out in force. The local press was very warm in its praise.

There is talk of calling a meeting after the holidays to organize a florists' club here.

Law Bros. report business very good. Their new store gives them much more room, and it has been very attractively arranged.

TORONTO.

Everybody is getting in shape for their Christmas trade, and present prospects point to a good supply of carnations, but a shortage in No. 1 roses, although we believe there will be plenty of No. 2 stock, as the dull weather has caused a great amount of the stuff to come weak, and can only be classed as No. 2.

Violets promise to be scarce, as the mild weather brought on such a crop of foliage that many of the plants are not yielding equal to former years.

We note during the last week a sharp increase in the price, and the cold weather has considerably decreased the supply. So much so has this been noticeable that one of our local dealers, who has been dealing in C. P. R. of late, was heard to say that the wholesale price of cut flowers was about as uncertain as the ruling price of C. P. R. One of the wholesale men sent out four different price lists during the week, each one raising on the previous one.

We are hearing the same old song from the local dealers in holly and other Christmas decorative material that it is going to be very scarce, and from the prices that are being quoted we guess they think so. However, another two weeks will make it certain.

Miller & Sons are finishing up their great supply of mums, and Mr. Miller says he is glad, as the rush of the last two weeks has been something terrible. They also have a very fine house of carnations, which are about as fine as any seen in this locality. D. J.

PRESIDENT McKINLEY.

WINNER OF THE $100 PRIZE AT KANSAS CITY FLOWER SHOW IN 1901, AND FIRST ON VASE OF 100 DARK PINK AT KANSAS CITY IN 1902.

This is what Edwin A. Kanst, one of the awarding judges, said of it: "President McKinley is a splendid flower. The petals are perfect, and it is well built. The color is deeper and brighter than the Lawson and the coloring is more distinct. The peculiar purplish tinge in the Lawson is absent from the President McKinley. It will become a favorite carnation."

This variety, like its parent Dorothy, is wonderfully free, also very early and an excellent keeper and shipper.

Rooted Cuttings ready Jan. 1, 1903. PRICE: $2 per doz.; $12 per 100; $100 per 1000.

Early struck cuttings of all the leading varieties of Carnations, also Chrysanthemums and Roses. We guarantee our stock to be satisfactory.

KANSAS CITY.

The week following the flower show proved a very dull one, but it might have been worse. Chrysanthemums were being held back for Thanksgiving day, and this helped the sales in other lines. Funeral work used many flowers, Newell having had a heavy run of this, and turned out some beautiful pieces. Rock had the decorations for the Sehley banquet, giving by the Commercial Club to Admiral Sehley, which was a very elaborate affair.

The Missouri-Kansans football game cut a big swath in the Thanksgiving business, especially yellow (Missouri's colors), and thousands of these were sold. The general business, as reported by the leading florists, is as follows: Newell did a heavy business in mums, having sold to exceed 800 Thanksgiving day, with a big increase over former years in regular lines. Rock's sales increased 25 per cent over last year in regular lines, but not quite so good on mums, the quality not being up to last year. Murray reports about 25 per cent increase, with few mums handled, while Barbe says 50 per cent. Barbe has been building this year.

Lawrence Schwager, who had charge of Mr. Newell's Walnut street store for several years, has opened for business on his own account at 1207 Grand avenue, with a neat store; and has been doing a good business from the start. Lawrence has plenty of ability and will make his new venture a success.

The Alpha Floral Co. have opened at 802 Walnut street.

Fred Weber has resigned as manager for Geo. M. Kellogg at their Kansas City house. John H. Vesey.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

During the last month cloudy weather prevailed, which considerably shortened the cuts of both roses and carnations and helped to sustain prices. Mums were practically over with a week before Thanksgiving and only the dregs remained to grace that festival.

The demand for roses and carnations at Thanksgiving was large and good prices were obtained. Most of the growers are just entering on their winter cut, and though the cut was big it is nothing to what they anticipate three weeks from now. Green, such as smilax, asparagus and adiantum was abundant and had a fair demand.

Comparing it with last year the volume of trade was greater and the demand more lively. Reports of prospects from all around are good, and we are all thankful as we ought to be. R.

MILWAUKEE.

The large increase in trade for Thanksgiving this year brought it almost in line with our leading holidays. The demand for cut flowers of all descriptions was exceedingly large. Carnations were in popular demand and large quantities were consumed. Roses sold well, and violets were short of demand. Miscellaneous small flowers, such as valley, Romans, paper whites and Marguerites, helped to fill out to some extent. A few lots of straggling mums came in and were cleaned up at fair prices.

There has been quite a drop in the green market the past few days. Pickers have been holding greens for snow and higher prices, and as the weather remained favorable, large quantities were picked. Much of it will now be thrown on the market too late to be handled at a profit by the jobbers of this commodity; whereas, if right prices could have been obtained earlier, it could all have been disposed of.

The C. C. Pollworth Co. has rented additional quarters for the handling of holly, greens and various Christmas decorative stock.

Incoo.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Thanksgiving day was cold and raw, with about an inch of "the beautiful." This, however, did not interfere with the enthusiasm of the football players, as in this game, as in everything else, Michigan won. Trade was brisk, the best ever known. Everything in the shape of a flower was cleaned up.

American Beauties sell at from $1 to $1.50 per doz. Carnations, 50 cents to 60 cents per dozen. Mums, $1 to $5 per dozen. Violets, 20 cents per dozen. The weather has been unfavorable to violets, many plants having the spot very badly. After all, it seems as if violet growing were a game of chance.

Henry Smith's new houses are nearing completion. A 10-foot wide house is to be planted at once with Princess of Wales violets. It is the custom here to leave the plants in the field until they get frost-bitten, then plant. Treated thus, this variety blooms remarkably free. It would not be safe to treat other varieties in this manner.

As a Christmas present to an appreciated employe or a friend in the trade nothing would prove more acceptable than a copy of the Florists' Manual, by Wm. Scott.

BASKETS OF ROSES.

This week we illustrate baskets of roses as shown at the recent Chicago exhibition.

No. 1 is a low basket with a high handle of grapewood, filled with a combination of President Carnot and Mme. Chatenay, a number of which were well open, with many buds interspersed, the two shades of pink blending nicely. There was little foliage used other than that of the roses and a few sprays of Asparagus plumosus. On one side of the handle is a bow of green ribbon, of a shade to match the foliage. This basket was the entry of John Mangel and was arranged by myself. It was awarded first prize.

No. 2 is a willow basket very prettily filled with Liberty roses, bordered with Adiantum princeps, the handle entwined with green ribbon. It was a very handsome basket. It was the entry of A. Lange and was awarded second prize.

No. 3 is much the same style of basket as No. 2, with the handle arranged differently and filled with Sunrise roses. A few fronds of Pteris cretica albo-lineata appear on the handles and in the body of the basket, while at the bottom is a border of foliage of a wild shrub that had been most beautifully colored red and bronze by nature. This combination of colors—the green and silver ferns, the beautiful bronze green foliage of the Sunrise rose and the bronze red shrub foliage—was very striking, and the designer, Mr. Jahn, with T. D. Mosconcesotes, deserves much credit for same.

Seasonable Hints.

In selecting wood for the propagation of American Beauties by cuttings, it is well to take it only from those plants which have proved the most floriferous. In nearly every house of Beauties there will be found plants which while showing a most vigorous growth are extremely obstinate in forming flower buds. As they naturally possess more wood than those which have flowered freely, they are frequently cut down and used for propagating, rather than those stems which are more likely to bloom. It would be wisdom to avoid these if possible, as no doubt the same characteristic would be perpetuated in stock taken from them.

Having used this method of selection for the last four years and found it to give satisfactory results, I can, with confidence, recommend it. Though producing fewer long stemmed flowers, there is a much larger cut of flowers with stems two to four feet long and as these come to maturity quicker than very long stems do, the profit is all the greater.

By selecting well ripened short jointed wood there is a possibility of having a batch of cuttings all of nearly equal ripeness, which will naturally, being under the same conditions and treatment, form roots in about the same period of time. If long stems are used which will yield from six to ten cuttings each it is obvious that there must be a material difference in their condition of ripeness, and consequently the period of root formation will be very irregular and protracted with a chance of losing a big percentage by leaf shedding.

Basket of Roses. No. 1.

The cuttings should have, if possible, two eyes, and where short jointed wood is used this is easily obtained. They should be given plenty of room so as not to crowd or overlap each other so that the foliage will dry out quickly after syringing.

The sand should never be allowed to become too dry, as this will be sure to cause the cuttings to drop their leaves, and these, however well rooted they may be, never attain that vigor so necessary to insure success. Overwatering will produce the same result.

The cuttings should be carefully shaded every bright day for the first two weeks, as any approach to wilting means ruin. After the callous has formed they should be gradually inured to sunshine, which will hasten the making of roots. To secure good, strong plants for May planting, propagating should be accomplished before the end of December. Next week I will give a short treatise on propagating by grafting.

CARNATION NOTES—WEST.

The Christmas Cut.

This article will be a repetition of what I have said in these notes before and many readers of the REVIEW will recall my other articles on the same subject and perhaps wonder at this repetition. To those this is not for enlightenment, but it is to be a reminder of what I have told them before.

I know it is useless for any one to say to the growers that they should not raise the temperature in their carnation houses just before the holidays, or to assert that nothing is gained by forcing out a few extra blooms to meet that terrible rush for flowers during the last three days prior to Xmas. This much is certain, there are demanded at least double as many blooms as are needed at other times and they must come from some where. Either they must be saved up or else the plants must be induced to supply an extra heavy cut for a few days. Either of these, if practiced to excess, will be ruinous to the one indulging in the practice, but if done with moderation and judgment will materially help to successfully meet the extra demand at this time.

Every year in the holiday reports we see where growers held up their stock for a week or more and then dumped large quantities on to the market the last minute and not only ruined prices for themselves, but for every one else as well. We also come across a good many cases of plants having been over-forced and gotten into a soft and weakened condition so that they would be unfit to produce blooms of fair quantity for three months after. We have always found that it paid us well to look to the health of our plants first and if we have to refuse a few orders to save our plants it paid us to refuse them. Of course, any of us hate to turn down an order when the blooms will bring just double or triple what they will bring a week later and that is what causes so many to lose their judgment. Just remember that you will need blooms, and a good lot of them all during January and February, up to Lent, perhaps all you will be able to cut, and how quickly you will lose those few extra dollars if your plants are worked so that your blooms for a month will average 25 per cent. lower than they should.

If you go about it right you can increase your cut of blooms materially and not injure the plants either, but don't lose your head. About ten days before Xmas begin to raise the temperature a degree each day or night until you have raised it about 6 degrees, but no higher, and after Xmas lower it the same way and you will be able to cut a good many more blooms and your plants will not suffer either. About the time you begin raising the temperature it would be advisable to give them a weak dose of some kind of food. It should be something that will harden the growth and stiffen the stems. Lime, wood ashes or bone would answer well. If you use bone mix it with moist soil and have it lie a few days before using it, but the lime or ashes can be used alone.

Our trade calls for blooms every day and we would not dare to hold back all our stock, even for three or four days, but we do manage to hold back a few extra blooms to help out during the rush. The blooms that are saved back must be looked over every day and none should be kept back except those that will keep in really first-class condition. Many growers leave the blooms on the plants until they are wanted, but that will not always do. If the sun comes out bright it soon takes the color out of the pink varieties and that rich velvety look off of the scarlets, and it will make the blooms soft to remain long in a higher temperature than they are accustomed to. Cut the blooms and put them in vases, not too many in a vase, and put these in a cellar or a cool room where the temperature stands regularly at about 45 to 48 degrees. A half darkened room will be easiest on the color, and do not have a draught blowing over them.

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.

Early Propagation.

Slow growing or naturally late varieties should now receive attention as regards getting up a stock for next year. You will have had by this time an opportunity to decide what standard varieties it is best to continue. Among the new introductions you bought last year you have no doubt found in some a decided improvement over older sorts. As to the doubtful new ones, it may not be amiss to give a few facts regarding one of the leading commercial sorts of today. For two years after its birth this variety showed no marked improvement over then existing sorts except in color and fragrance. The originator had concluded to discard it, but during the season of propagation a few cuttings were taken, resulting at blooming time in a decided advance which was still farther advanced during the next year when it was disseminated and has since proved a decided acquisition. Thus it will be seen that one must not be hasty in judging new varieties.

It is here that natural law seems to assert itself in its government over conditions we produce. Everything is seeking a higher plane. From time immemorial all life has striven to improve, which is but natural inclination. Combine with this human intellect and we cannot expect anything but advancement. As long as life exists there will be a natural impulse to improve and your duty is to avail yourself of every opportunity presented.

Therefore in selection of cuttings it is evident that they should be taken from such plants as you know to be in perfect health. Constant association puts you in a position to be well informed on this matter so there is no excuse for improper selection in so far as those varieties you have under control are concerned. Pardon this short sermonizing letter, but trust to say more next week about selection of cuttings.

CARNATION TROUBLES.

I send samples of Flora Hill and Lawson carnations. Hill is planted next to a mum house where the temperature is kept at 40 degrees. Is that too cold? The Lawsons are in house with other varieties that is kept at 55 degrees. Have mulched and given manure water. I also send a sample of Cressbrook buds, which don't open perfectly. The plants are in same house with Hill. The soil is a sandy loam. What is the cause of the trouble and the remedy in each case? H. L. C.

The sample came in good order and I could readily see what was wrong with the F. Hill and the Mrs. Lawson, but I was unable to detect anything wrong in the Cressbrook bud. There were no thrips present and the growth looked perfectly healthy. Possibly the temperature is too low, but I can not say how that would act on that particular variety. It does not make any difference what the temperature is in the house next to your carnation house if you keep your carnation house up to where it should be. If there is no partition between the two houses and the mum house is as low as 40, your carnation house is sure to be too cold.

The F. Hill are afflicted with bacteriosis and I do not know of any cure for it. You can check its spread to some extent by keeping your plants on the dry side and do not feed them much. An occasional sprinkling of slaked lime will keep the soil sweet and help to check the disease. This variety is badly affected with this disease on many places all over the country and unless it is taken in hand soon it will destroy the variety. It gets its tendency to that disease from its parent, Uncle John, which was destroyed by that disease after it had been out a few years. Do not propagate from plants that show those yellow spots, and do not over-water nor over-feed and you can keep your stock comparatively free from it.

The Mrs. Lawson have the fusarium stem-rot, or dry rot, and I am sorry to say that we are hearing of a great many cases among that variety in all sections of the country. I fear it may get away with it, as the other stem-rot is destroying Crane in some sections of the country. A recent visitor told me that in his neighborhood whole benches of Crane have been thrown out on account of it. We are not troubled that way here and we would hate to lose that fine variety just yet.

As I have said before in these notes, it will pay you to pull up and burn all the affected plants as soon as you see them. Spray the plants with the copper and ammonia solution and give all the air you can at all times.

A. F. J. BAUR.

FEEDING CARNATIONS.

Am I fertilizing my carnations right? Have not given any mulch yet, but have used 12 pounds of bonemeal to 1,000 plants twice, once a month, and commenced last week to use two ounces of phosphate of ammonia, one and three-quarter ounces of nitrate of soda and one and three-quarter ounces of sulphate of ammonia in fifty gallons of water to 1,000 plants every two weeks. Ought I to keep using bonemeal once a month, or would it be better to use more at a time and not so often? SUBSCRIBER.

Your method of feeding your carnation plants is somewhat different from what I would recommend. Of course, you know your soil and you have your plants before you and you can see whether you are doing them good or harm better than I can judge. You do not complain of any harm having come to your plants, so I will take it for granted that they are still in good shape.

We usually mix enough bonemeal into the soil to supply the plants until toward spring, when they start into that strong spring growth. We consider a mulch of rotted cow manure applied in September far superior to any other fertilizer and it usually is enough with a couple of sprinklings of lime or wood ashes to run the plants through the dark weather.

If your plants seem to thrive under your treatment you should keep it up, but always keep your eyes open and be sure it is not made too strong during the dark days of December, January and February. I would discontinue the bone feeding after commencing with the liquid chemical solution.

NOTES OF A WAYFARER.

Starting at Indianapolis with a determination to catch a certain train for Richmond in order to do these two towns, floriculturally speaking, in one day was, to say the least, a mighty task.

At Indianapolis the first thought, of course, was Bertermann Bros. Well, what's the use, we must make time and we can picture that place in our mind, as can anyone who has had the good fortune to enjoy the hospitality of these people. Their place is always spick and span, their carnations and pot plants the same. The same genial greeting, whether at the store or greenhouses, always awaits the pilgrim to Indianapolis, therefore to save time and being interested in a different line we journeyed to the woods north of town. Here we found Baur. We don't know what happened to Jones, or Smith, rather, but we missed him.

There was Baur on his knees. It's a fact. We stood in the gloaming of the potting shed until that gentleman came back to the world, when one of our party remarked, "How often do you do that, Mr. Baur?" "Oh, about six times a day, six days in the week, and about six more months for this season. Then we shall fire 'em out and plant on raised benches like other civilized florists." The fact of the matter was that the carnations in this particular house had been planted in beds in the open field last spring and the greenhouse built over them, thus doing away with transplanting. If you want to work a new constitution into your stock, that's the idea. We never saw a finer batch of Crane—large flowers on strong stems in abundance, and from the appearance of the stubs a big crop had been picked. Crocker also was doing well, as is usual here. Elma and Roosevelt were among the good ones, while one or two others came in the class of "also rans," looking yearningly towards the glass, occasionally a fine bloom looking up at us as much as to say, "Use your influence with this man towards giving us another chance next year on benches, when we think we can hold our own with the best of them." Naturally our hearts went out to them, and while our tongues sort of clove to the roof of our mouths, nudging each other, we managed to suggest the idea to Mr. Baur, who informed us that it had been their intention ever since they built the house to put in benches the second season. We could readily see, taking into consideration the fact that their trade calls for carnations every month in the year, that for the first season the method followed was a paying one.

The older houses are planted on benches, and we understand the majority of the plants had been grown in pots until planting time. There were seedlings in quantity from indifferent to extra good, and none bad. That pink—well, look out; we saw it last year. It comes in the class of darker than Scott, and in our opinion will take that cake when put on the market. John Mitchell, a white, is nearly on a par with above.

It's a toss up between Cloud and Lorna as seen here, with the chances favoring the former. The three ladies, Mrs. Nelson, Mrs. Higinbotham and Mrs. Palmer, were enough thought of to sacrifice all bloom for cuttings. Perhaps this should speak for their value when grown by such a good judge as Mr. Baur.

We left this establishment with a firm conviction that the REVIEW's Carnation Notes—West, were written by one that knows whereof he speaks.

We found E. A. Nelson's place, only three blocks away, in the finest condition. Axel was not at home, but the young man in charge soon had the wires hot enough to bring that gentleman scorching up on a bike in no time. Here, of course, as last year, the Mrs. Nelson was the attraction, but more attractive now than last year. It's all right, emphatically so, away ahead of what it was when a great many of us saw it last February, a fair lot of bloom being picked every day and promise of an abundance later, and the plants in the healthiest possible condition. As you all know, Mr. Nelson for some reason or other had no success in rooting this variety last season, but other years met with no difficulty whatever. From our experience there is no more trouble in rooting this variety than a number of others. We predict an enormous demand for Nelson this season, as very little stock is distributed. Roses, bulbous stock and pot plants are also grown, all showing the magic touch of the true gardener, whoever he is, especially so in the case of Lorraine Begonia.

John Hartje, of Jubilee fame, being nearby, we thought it possible he might have some improved Jubilee. No sir, not a one, but whites galore, one of them a commercial variety of the highest calibre McGowan blood. Another that is also free looks as though it would travel in the best of company. They will both be grown in larger quantities next year with two or three other varieties in which John is not overconfident. But then, he was not overconfident with Jubilee and remember what a record it made throughout the west. We are looking forward to the time when he will strike a Fee-on-say, when no doubt he will cover that fine place of his with glass and be in possession of the best suburban retail business in the Apolis.

Preparing for Christmas.

The last ten days before Christmas sees with many of us an entire suspension of gardening operations, and all hands except the fireman and the cook are winding wreathing of various materials, making wreaths and preparing for the merry-making and decorations that now so happily pervades the whole land. Time was, and not so far remote, when the descendants of the Puritans in the populous Eastern States made a blue face at Christmas joys, but now it is a day of gladness from Nova Scotia to the setting sun, and from Harry Papworth to Manitoba.

Before I say what little I know about trade in greens, let me prattle a little about the necessity of preparations in the plant line, for plants will enter again largely into our holiday sales. It is, as we all know, impossible to crowd the work of a week in ordinary times into twenty-four hours before the dawn of Christmas morning, and everything that can possibly be done ahead of time should be done. "Order is the first law of heaven," so someone has said who was privileged to have a look in, and system in business is all important. Some individuals get along in confusion and muss, but they are those who do all the detail themselves, and if anyone steps in to help they are of little assistance, for they don't know where to take hold.

It is seldom in any establishment, big or little, that a space can not be given to the plants that are purchased, and if it can and the bench is covered with coarse paper, the plants when sold can be placed there and divided into groups that are to be delivered on certain days. In this connection another feature of the Christmas business and rush is worthy of mention—routing the loads for your delivery wagons. There is frequently great delay and waste of time of both men and horses because you have not your deliveries routed. Certain wagons go into certain sections of the city, north, south, east or west, and to have all these arranged in groups for their respective entries is an immense saving of time, and it is easily done when you have the plants before you and not scattered over half a dozen houses. A very large proportion of our best sales are made several days before delivery and here is a chance to evade confusion. Plenty of sales are made the last day or two to give you all the extra work and rush you want.

The system I advocate and have found to work smoothly is this: First, we do not depend on our usual order files for Christmas Eve or several previous days, but have special files for those special days. Mrs. Daphne on the 21st buys or orders an azalea to be sent to Mrs. Lotus and a cyclamen to Miss Jasmine and says "Here is my card for both of them." A small tag is attached to each plant with the name "Daphne." The order reads "Charge Mrs. Daphne 1 azalea, price $3. Deliver to Mrs. Lotus December 24." The order and card are put into a cheap seed envelope and put on orders for delivery on the 24th. Now, you can not put a mat around the pot, or ribbon on the plant, or the card on, because they would get soiled.

On the night before the 24th all hands are wrapping plants, covering pots or decorating with ribbons and attaching cards, and the boss can hand out orders and directions for several good men, and so he stands with the orders before him and says: "Here, John, you will find an azalea and a cyclamen labeled 'Daphne.' Attach this card and this address to the azalea and this card and this address to the cyclamen." You then file away the order for making the charge as soon as the rush is over, and if it is paid for, reference on your tag which bears the address. It is a great help all around to write on it what the plant is. For instance, in the above case it would be, "Mrs. Lotus, 33 Periwinkle street, 1 azalea," and if two plants were going there, write them both on the tag. It helps the delivery man very much.

If the above seems a good deal of clerical work, remember that if one good plant is lugged over town without finding its destination, or the wrong plant is delivered, the loss in its value would pay the day's wages of a smart clerk. The clean fingers of a lad or the pretty fingers of a young woman can have baby ribbons attached to the card or the little envelope that encloses it, and that in many cases can be done ahead of time, for the day of fastening a card or envelope to a plant with wire or a piece of grocer's twine is past.

I can remember the time when plants were delivered with dirty pots. Those were the days contemporary with carnations with 3-inch stems being sent out in a cigar box, and the salesman wore rubber boots. All pots should be clean and dry, whether covered with paper or not; but who nowadays would dare to send out a pretty plant with a naked red pot? Whether the customer asks for it or not, he puts green, white or some color harmonizing with the flower on the pot of every plant. A sheet of green paper, then a sheet of white, and the plant stood in the center and the paper brought up around the edge of the pot adds wonderfully to the tastefulness and finish of any plant. And the paper should be tied around the pot with tinsel cord, not string or wire. The cent or two of expense these fancy touches give to the plant is nothing compared to the pleasure they will give, and if you don't keep up with the procession others will forge ahead.

The matter of ribbon on plants is of doubtful taste. I said last week that on baskets of plants they are almost a necessity, but on an individual plant it is quite another thing. A ribbon, not over 1½ or at most 2 inches broad, tied around the pot with a pretty bow, is not out of place, but then it would have to harmonize with the pot cover and flower. A small feathery bow of red ribbon on an araucaria will do very well, and a broad red ribbon on a pan of poinsettias will make the show richer. I can scarcely think of a handsome azalea of any color, or Begonia Lorraine, or cyclamen being enhanced by the addition of ribbon.

Now, although you can't do this trimming up of plants in the greenhouse until a few hours, or at most a day, before you deliver them, it is essential that the plants in your store window or your showroom at the greenhouse should be decked out in their best, for their finished and attractive appearance is what will sell them, and they will be samples of what you will do to any plant that is bought. There are many accessions to our business that have the past few years added considerably to the cost of conducting it, and but few of them can be charged for directly. But the ribbon business you can not afford to throw in. You can always charge that in the sum total of the sale, and more than the cost of it.

Bouquet green or ground pine seem to be going out of fashion and are not much used for private decorations. Still you should make up some yourself, for it is much better than you can buy. Make it in ten-yard lengths on coarse string, dyed a deep green. Twenty-five cents' worth of the dye will color 400 yards, and then you won't see the naked spots, if any. The pine wreaths are also in little demand, and everybody wants holly and I never knew us to have enough. Make all you can and as early as you can, for all hands are too busy the last few days. There are all kinds of holly wreaths made, some with holly only on one side and green on the other, some with red immortelles added to the holly. But the wreath that sells best is a full wreath of holly on all sides, and be prepared with plenty of cheap red ribbon to tie on a handsome bow when ordered. We are asked for wreaths on a 12-inch and 15-inch wire, and a few 18-inch.

The handsomest and cleanest material for garlands or roping is the Allegheny Laurel (kalmia). It is quickly made into roping and looks rich in decorations. Make it yourself if you can, for it gets sadly crushed when shipped. The keeping or storing of these Christmas greens is often a question, for it takes lots of room. Holly should not be frozen too stiff. When the wreaths are made, beneath a greenhouse bench is a good place to keep them, but don't pile them up too high or they flatten out. Ground pine will keep anywhere, no matter how cold, if the light and air is kept from it. This Christmas green business is largely in the hands of hucksters and peddlers, but our good customers depend on us and there is a good profit in it. WILLIAM SCOTT.

THE COLOR SCHEME IN CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

BY PROF. JOHN F. COWELL.

[Read before the Chrysanthemum Society of America at the Chicago convention.]

When I received an invitation to prepare a paper for this national body of experts, gathered in convention to-day, I must confess that I doubted my ability to prepare anything that would be either new or interesting on the subject dearest to the heart of this society, and the more I looked into the extensive literature of the chrysanthemum the stronger this feeling became.

To find some phase of the subject which had not been thoroughly threshed out and winnowed and yet within the limit of my time and knowledge seemed an almost hopeless task, and only my feeling of duty to your organization prevented my declining the honor.

The subject as announced briefly is "The Color Scheme in Chrysanthemums," and the investigations on which much of what I have to say is based were carried on by me over a quarter of a century ago. I must beg of you not to regard my remarks as a sermon or a lecture, but merely as a rambling talk, on certain theories, which may bring out further discussion of benefit to all interested in extending the color range in the queen of autumn.

My acquaintance with the chrysanthemum dates back over forty years, and my earliest recollection is of the clumps of somewhat pinky white and rather striped purple blooms that stood in a sheltered nook beneath the dining-room windows of my boyhood's home. While these blooms would hardly pass muster to-day, yet I remember that we looked forward to their blooming and valued them the more because they braved the cold November winds with their modest show of color.

Of the then choicer varieties, grown in pots for indoor decoration, were a bronzy yellow, a pure white and a brown red or maroon, all of which were small, reflexed blooms of the Chinese type. As above indicated, all of these early forms of the Chinese species were of rather impure color.

The wine-colored or magenta tints did appear in many of these, but I do not remember anything that could be called, even by courtesy, pink among them. With the Fortune introductions came gradually pure yellows, fairly good pinks, wine reds, waxy whites and nearly all the other shades except red, scarlet and blue, and notwithstanding many years of cultivation since, the blue and the scarlet have not been attained.

Just why these colors have eluded us it is hard to say. The long line of heredity within historic times seems to have been too weak in the proper pigments to dominate the blooms and by many the possibility of obtaining the blue chrysanthemum is doubted. In considering the possibility of reaching this more or less desired result, it may be well to recall what has been done with other species before we proceed further. It may encourage us.

The Chinese primrose, introduced to cultivation in England in the early part of the last century, seems to have been either white or of varying intensity of purplish pink, yet in recent years the colors have been much intensified and varied and we now have good reds and a pretty respectable blue. It is true that the yellow is yet mainly confined to the central portion of the flower and is very slow to diffuse itself.

The pansy may be mentioned as another example. Here from the original wild Viola tricolor, with its creamy white petals faintly marked or stained with purple, we now have good blues, yellows and even red, with countless intermediate tints. The garden phloxes have varied under cultivation from the original rosy bloom to deep red, scarlet, lilac and an approach to yellow, all since 1835.

The old theory that blue and yellow cannot occur in the same genus has long been exploded, as witness viola, iris, aquilegia, linum, delphinium and many others. Still the fact remains that where the species was originally blue, yellow has been most difficult to attain, and where yellow pure and simple was the original color blue has never, to my knowledge, been produced.

The pigments which enter into the colors of flowers have been divided into two series, the xanthic or yellow and the cyanic or blue. To the blue series we must credit all the reds, and we must consider the greens as mixtures of the two series.

These pigments are dissolved in the cell sap and are often so abundant as to be seen in the leaves and stems as well as the flowers. Familiar examples of this excess of pigment may be seen in carnations, primroses, cinerarias, cyclamens, etc.; so marked is it in many cases that it is easy to group a lot of seedlings according to color long before they come into blossom. These coloring matters may be extracted and crystallized. If solutions be made of these crystals some interesting results may be obtained by treating them with certain organic acids and alkalies. The reactions brought about seem to be analogous to the changes of color seen in the blossoms of living plants. Solutions of the cyanic group are readily acted upon by dilute acids and alkalies, such as tartaric and oxalic acid on the one hand and sodium compounds, even ammonia, on the other.

The xanthic group, however, is most refractory and defies any change except slow oxidation, by means of which the pigment is destroyed. I now refer to the action of the vegetable acids; with sulphuric or hydrochloric acids xanthophyl changes to green and blue. Changes of blue to red and red to green are easily brought about. Changes from red to green and from red to blue are very common in nature. In early spring young leaves of maples and other trees are often quite red, but later as the leaves grow and mature the coloring becomes green. Later in the season the change is reversed, and we see the green changing to red. In many flowers a similar change takes place. In mertensia and other boraginaceous flowers the expanding buds are red and change to blue as they come into antithesis. Green is to be considered as a mixture of blue and yellow, and it is well known that chlorphyl, the green coloring matter of leaves, is separable after crystallization into yellow and blue elements.

The green coloring matter of plants, existing principally in the leaves of plants and often in a less degree in the flowers, is known as chlorophyl. This coloring matter may be easily extracted by digesting the leaves with dilute alcohol. The coloring matter of many flowers may be extracted in the same way, and most of them seem to be closely allied to the green coloring matter of the leaves. There are, however, to be found in certain flowers color pigments which are soluble in water. So far as is known, no one has been able to dissolve the yellow coloring in water and but few of the blues. In testing these extracted colors with the spectrum analysis the yellow and blue coloring matters of the chrysanthemum seem to be identical with chlorophyl and are only to be dissolved by alcohol or benzol, not by water.

The method of separating blue from the yellow elements is based upon the greater solubility of the blue in benzol, and the corresponding greater solubility of the yellow in alcohol; the yellow is extracted by alcohol, but the green is not, or at least very slowly. It is to be understood that these coloring matters are rarely found in a state of purity, there being almost always representatives of the two groups present in colored flowers, and it is the differing proportions that give us the infinite number of tints seen in nature.

Now, considering the convertibility of these pigments of the cyanic group and the presence of the yellow pigment in the mixture, are there any good reasons for expecting scarlet and blue to appear in chrysanthemum flowers? Let us look for a moment on the color of this bloom as it is to-day and as it was at the time of its introduction. The oldest colored plate of the bloom that I have seen represents it as a purplish pink, a strongly cyanic color. On the other hand, yellow has always been well and abundantly present in the cultivated varieties since their earliest introduction into this country, at least, and since the Japanese introductions yellow of great purity has been almost predominating.

The very name of the flower refers to the yellow coloring. If we are to consider yellow as original and typical of C. indicum, it would seem from what we know of the immutability of that pigment an almost hopeless task to convert it into blue or any other color. But, if I mistake not, the other parent of our modern flower is strongly cyanic. Many of our hybrid blooms are strongly impregnated with the cyanic pigment, and we have quite a long list of varieties described as amaranth, purplish crimson, magenta, lilac, mauve, etc., certainly showing a marked increase in the amount of the blue pigment, in these later years.

The forces that govern the character of the secretions in the cells of the plant are most delicately adjusted, and an increment or a diminution that baffles the most sensitive scale of the chemist may change entirely the color of a flower or transform a leaf. And so it is to qualitative rather than quantitative analysis that we must look for the solution of many of the problems of plant life.

Qualitative tests seem to show that the reactions which bring about the red and yellow and red colors are acid, and those that give us blue and green are of an alkaline character. Just how far this knowledge will help us in the production of the missing colors in chrysanthemums remains to be seen.

It certainly will not do to rely on hypodermic injections or on absorption of gaseous fumes for the attainment of the end in question; but the knowledge may be of some use to us in the work of development. It is entirely probable that the process of developing the new colors will be along the lines of selection and breeding, and when we remember what wonderful results have been brought about by long continued and intelligently applied effort there seems to be a fighting chance.

It would seem that, given one color to start with, it ought to be a comparatively easy matter to produce the opposing color, that is, if we have red to start with, we ought to obtain green without difficulty; if we have purple we ought to get yellow, theoretically. Practically it is not so easy, it seems. Indications are that it is from the cyanic flower nearest in value to the color desired that we must proceed. This group, or at least that part of it which lies between the violet and the red, seems to be easily disturbed and changed or broken up. For instance, in working for a blue one would naturally start with a violet red, which we already have and which is a particularly instable color. In working for scarlet one would preferably begin with an orange red shade modified with blue, if possible.

Another problem connected with the preceding is that of obtaining a homogenous coloring on both sides of the petal. At the present I think our nearest approaches to red and scarlet are to be found in the bi-colors. Here, of course, the unity of the color is marred by the dull papery under-petal.

With distinctly and regularly reflexed flat-petaled flowers of course this is not so noticeable; but with less compact inflorescence or of incurved blooms the dull coloring and poor texture spoils many a bloom otherwise admirable. This difference in color and texture is not uncommon in the petals of flowers generally. A great many of our flowers that are upright or lateral exhibit this same diversity—the lower or outer surfaces are greenish, dull-colored, or coarse, while in the pendulous flowers this difference is not so marked. The reason advanced is that in the one case the brilliant coloring is not needed, as practically only one side—the upper—of the petal is seen. In the case of the pendulous flower it is the outer side of the petal that is presented to the eye, and so it is to be made the conspicuous surface. Why these things occur thus and so is all written in the book of evolution. To be sure, it has taken a long time to bring these colors about in the haphazard way of nature. We expect the modern florist to accomplish in a few years more than natural selection has done in thousands.

The evolutionist of to-day can make his crosses between forms gathered from the uttermost parts of the earth, and is not confined as nature has been to slight variations growing accidentally in juxtaposition. If one chrysanthemum bloom shows the desired characteristic there is no reason why all cannot be made to do so. Like produces like, and unlike produces unlike, just as surely to-day as it did a thousand years ago, and there is no good reason to believe that we have reached the limit in any direction. As we accumulate knowledge we incease in power over all things and a little obstacle like the coloring of a bit of cellular tissue should not be insurmountable.

Perhaps I have left you still just as far from an answer to the question as you were when I began. However, what has been may be again, and even new combinations are possible. It has been demonstrated that both pure red and blue pigments exist in the species, and the possibility of intensifying and isolating them seems to me to be not unreasonable. Because we have never seen these colors appear is no reason why they may not yet come. At any rate, I think we shall all agree as to the desirability of this increase in color, though we may differ as to the probability of reaching the goal. And I feel sure that if this change is ever brought about it will be due in a great measure to the inspiration of the C. S. A.

J. A. Budlong, Chicago.

In this issue we visit pictorially the establishment of Mr. J. A. Budlong, Bowmanville, Chicago. The general view takes in a wide range of territory and does not show up the houses very well. On one side is the older range, containing nine houses each 22x300 and eight houses 20x200, and on the other is the new range, containing ten houses, each 27x200. The new range has the Garland iron gutter and iron post construction, and the posts are set in concrete.

The entire establishment is heated by steam from one battery of boilers, containing six boilers of 85-horse-power and two of 50-horse-power. The steam coils are all 2-inch and Mr. Budlong is satisfied this size is best for his purpose.

In roses, Brides, Maids, Beauties and Meteors are the big four at this establishment. Liberty has been tried to some extent, but does not seem likely to supplant Meteor here. Golden Gate is considered all right in limited numbers. They do not now replant their roses every year, believing they get equally good results by resting and top-dressing. They have carried over some plants to the third year with very satisfactory results. But when carried over beyond the second year they replant in fresh soil.

They expect to add six new houses each 27x300 for carnations next year, to the present range of which an interior view is given in this issue.

Mr. J. A. Budlong now gives little personal attention to the business, his son, A. H. Budlong, having relieved him of the cares of same. He is therefore able in pleasant weather to take little jaunts on his bicycle—to Boston and back, to the Ohio river, or other points within easy wheeling distance. He is also fond of music and has just invested in a new graphophone. He says that he has selected all "joyful music," which would indicate that he is getting his share of prosperity.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market is easier than one week ago; a great many more flowers are coming in. The demand is good but not so brisk as it was; prices have not advanced. Some of the stock grades high. Double violets are rather scarce; valley is hardly as plentiful as a week ago. Edward Reid has a good thing in sweet peas; he is receiving both white and pink, or more properly speaking, pink and white. The white are held at a slightly higher figure than the pink; both sell well. White carnations are in better demand than the colored; some of the poorer grades are on the street at low prices. Greens are selling well.

The Flower Market.

Chas. E. Meehan feels greatly encouraged by the support given the market. The growers who bring their stock in each morning are increasing in number and nearly all are pleased with their sales. More buyers are coming in as the season advances, giving the place the atmosphere of a mart. The floor and wall spaces are being taken in a way to indicate that it will not be very long before the big surface is covered. Already more wall space has been taken than is taken in the combined markets of New York and Boston. The action of the board of directors in accepting consignments on a commission of 15 per cent from those who do not rent stalls is bringing some good out of town stock. Leo Niessen has a very attractive stand in the market for the sale of Christmas greens and other supplies useful to the retailer.

Notes.

C. H. Campbell reports a very good demand for early chrysanthemums, both cut flowers and pot plants. Of the later sorts W. H. Lincoln is still found satisfactory. Mr. Campbell spent three years in California as a seed grower, doing well. He returned here last summer and on July 1 succeeded his brother, George E. Campbell (now of Flourtown) in charge of the place at 3601 Germantown avenue, where pot plants are a specialty.

The Floral Exchange has experienced an encouraging demand for their rose, Queen of Edgely. H. C. Geiger says that the orders are often booked a long time ahead and that at times their 10,000 plants cannot produce enough to keep pace with the demand.

Charles Smith, formerly of this city, now of Harrisburg, came on to attend the party given by Pennock Bros.

John Burton and John N. May have just returned from a week's trip. They visited, among other places, The E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., and the Dale Estate, Brampton, Ont.

P. Welch, of Boston, was in town last week.

It is rumored on the street that George Craig, Robert Crawford, Jr., and Robert Kift will give a dinner dance to their friends among the growers before Christmas!!!

Harry Bayersdorfer brought a very handsome screen from Europe on a special order from Hugh Graham.

Edwin Lonsdale is sending in some fine Ivory and Golden Gate to the flower market.

M. Rice & Co. are making a new palm leaf cover for pots and ferneries, which is neat and attractive.

A commission house friend says that the Review's enterprise in giving an accurate account of the party last Saturday night on the very day it occurred was much praised. He adds that after the box party adjourned to Boothby's they had a very pleasant time. There was a delicious supper, music, and a good speech from the host, J. Lyddon Pennock, who was most cordial to his guests. Here is a complete list: Wm. Thompson, Al. M. Campbell, Bernard Goldrick, Chas. L. Schmidt, Edgar Upton, Ernest Frame, E. Bernheimer, Wm. J. Moore, Wm. Stevens, Paul Klingsporn, S. F. Lilley, John McIntyre, Fred Smith, J. Lyddon Pennock, R. G. Shingley, Ben Starkey.

Frank Miles Day read a paper entitled "The Literature of Gardening" before the Germantown Horticultural Society last Monday evening.

Bowling.

The Florist team—George M. Moss, D. T. Connor, Robert Kift, Frank Polites and Walter Yates—defeated the Alexis Club on the home alleys last. The Florists lost the first game by a close score but won the second and third games. The team is tie for first place with won eight, lost four. Phil.

NEW YORK.

Club Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the New York Florists' Club was held on Monday evening at the club's parlors, 128 E. 28th street. It was election night and the attendance was large, over 50 members being present. A. J. Manda, Jerry Donohue, W. W. Campbell and John Livingstone were elected to membership, and two nominations were announced. The election of the officers developed a good natured contest for the vice-presidency and secretaryship, the other officers floating into their honors with unruffled ease. The counting of the votes resulted as follows: President, J. H. Troy; vice-president, Frank H. Traendly, secretary, John Young; treasurer, Chas. Weathered. Trustees for two years: C. H. Allen, John Bernie, Walter Sheridan. Interesting addresses were made by the elected officers, and the club commences its new year with the assurance of cordial co-operation with the officials by every member present. A photograph of the club members was taken, and later you will have an opportunity of beholding the faces of the "annointed."

An exhibit of a dozen fine types of Percivaliana cattleyas was made by Lager & Hurrell, and a grand vase of Harlowarden carnation, by Mr. James Hartshorne, of the Chicago Carnation Co., who was present, and who entertained the club with a very enjoyable account of his trip through the carnation centers of Indiana, Ohio and Maryland. Mr. Hartshorne will visit the Flatbush carnationists, and Mr. Ward at the Cottage Gardens, before proceeding to Cromwell, Westerly and Boston. The Harlowarden flowers were cut on Thursday last, shipped from Joliet Saturday morning, and arrived in New York Monday in perfect condition, showing not the slightest depreciation (except in fragrance) by the long trip, and scoring 94 points after an exhaustive consideration by a most critical committee. Mr. Hartshorne predicted for the carnation convention at Brooklyn the greatest success of the society, but declared that the carnation, like the star of Empire, westward wins its widening way. He then read Mr. Dorner's original description of "Fianeee." Mr. Hartshorne failed to make any reference to Fianeee until urgently requested by the club to do so, stating it was his desire that other carnations should maintain their prominence until he was ready to demonstrate its position, as already judged, as the finest carnation in the world.

The death of Mr. Alex McLellan, one of the club's members, was announced and a committee was appointed to draft resolutions of sympathy.

An annual dinner was decided upon and the necessary committee appointed to arrange for the same.

The dinner to be given by the Brooklyn Horticultural Society to the American Carnation Society was announced for February 20, with accommodations for 500 guests.

The medal awarded Mr. Wells for the grand display of English chrysanthemums was declared ready for presentation and will be taken to England by Mr. Dimmock.

Several donations of premiums awarded at the Madison Square flower show were generously returned to the club by the winners, and votes of thanks were given for the courtesy.

Petitions to congress for the removal of the duty on glass were submitted to the members and signed by everybody present.

The usual refreshments were dispensed and the members went out into the cold world harmoniously inclined to maintain the honorable record of the club during 1903.

Notes.

Mr. John Henshaw, brother of Samuel Henshaw, is visiting his sons at Short Hills, N. J., and will return next week to his home in England, after a pleasant two months' stay in this country.

The Christmas atmosphere is here. Great ship-loads of Christmas trees already line the docks, and holly, pine and all the adjuncts of the festive season are here. It will be a plant Christmas too, but already a shortage in ardisias, begonias and cyclamen is evident.

Warendorff will open his new store in the Ansonia December 15. It is a dream, with marble walls, mirror effects unique, superb ice boxes, and altogether, one of the handsomest stores in the world.

Hanft Bros. are already preparing for the Young Arion ball January 15, and their perpetual engagement, the big Arion ball, which has been in their charge through all the vicissitudes of 25 years, occurs on the 6th of February.

McConnell had a grand decoration at St. Bartholomew's church and the house reception for the Hollister-Forrest wedding last week. At the church great banks of palms were used with lily banks and gold vases on the altar, and on the pulpit 500 Bride roses and white chrysanthemums. Pierson's "W. S. Allen" pink Henry A. Dreer reports a very heavy business in herbaceous stock during the season just closed.

A "Smoker" will be the feature of the Tuesday meeting of the Florists' Club. Adolph Fahrenwald, Fred Ehret and Robert Kift will arrange the details. A good time is expected.

James Hartshorne, the famous Chicago carnation grower, was in town this week. Charles F. Feast, of Baltimore, was a visitor lately.

Joseph Heacock has a very fine lot of well grown Cocos Weddeliana. He has a new wrinkle of growing them that gives them great vigor.

L. B. Eastburn, of Kennett, is sending some fine bunches of Asparagus plumosus to W. J. Baker.

William K. Harris has some fine specimen plants of well berried holly at the flower market.

Samuel Aiken, Seventeenth and Columbia avenue, has the sympathy of his many florist friends in the loss of his mother.

George F. Christie, of Clifton, is sending some fine Brides and Maids to W. J. Baker; also some fine Gov. Roosevelt carnations.

mums and pink roses with wild smilax were used at the mansion.

A new store at 509 5th avenue was opened December 3 under the aesthetic name of the Rosemary Roseries, Inc. B. Q. Meyer is president and is a Yale graduate as are many of the stockholders, among whom are Marcus Daly, Horace Gould and Messrs. Havermeyer and Whitlaw Reid, Jr., as well as Miss Minnie Ashley, the prominent actress. The firm's conservatories are at Glenbrook, Conn., where are grown valley, Brides, Maids and Beauties. The New York papers gave elaborate accounts of the opening and the probable patronage of the 400.

Ralph Armstrong, for the past ten years with Siebrecht & Son, and Miss Alice McLeod, the firm's secretary and stenographer, were married last week. Miss McLeod was very popular and her services were much appreciated.

The Rosary has had a very attractive window of poinsettias and orange trees lately with moss trimmings. Mr. Troy, manager, just elected president of the New York Florists' Club, leaves this week for Aitkin, South Carolina, where he is arranging for the planting of an immense Italian garden.

Siebrecht & Sons have now completed their fine conservatory and greenhouses at 409 5th avenue, and have enlarged and redecorated their store so that in completeness and conveniences, the establishment is unequalled anywhere in the city.

McIntosh had the Donohue-Conville wedding at St. Vincent church last week, in which decoration of white and pink mums prevailed. The bride's bouquet was of white orchids and valley and the bridemaids' "muffs" of Golden Gate roses, with shower bouquets.

A. Warendorff's windows were gay with Christmas bells and Lorraine begonia baskets backed by Anna Foster ferns.

Thos. Young, jr., finds his 58th street branch a valuable adjunct to his bon ton clientage. He used a large number of white and yellow mums, Bridesmaids and white orchids, at the Arms wedding in St. Thomas church on 58th street. The new store displays an attractive electric sign and its windows are always beautifully arranged.

Julius Rochrs is finding demand for flowering plants this year far beyond his even, as he thought, inexhaustible supply.

Bobbink & Atkins have just received an additional importation of bay trees and large kentias; also holly trees well berried, for their Christmas trade. Their sales of evergreens for hotels, clubs and the large private mansions of the city have been very extensive. Other interesting late importations are apples, pears, peaches and cherries, pot grown for forcing, and 5,000 forcing rhododendrons, of 50 cents to $5 values, finely budded. Two specimen Araucaria imbricata, twenty feet in height, were a novel addition to their shipment.

H. H. Berger & Co. report a complete cleaning out of all their Holland and French goods and a late importation of tree and herbaceous paeonias from Japan for Easter flowering, and double flowering cherries at $50 per 100, which retail readily at Easter for $5 each.

Patrick Welsh of Boston, was a late visitor on his way to Philadelphia.

Jas. Hammond is handling some very fine orange trees for Christmas, 1,000 of them having already been sold. His cut flower trade grows steadily.

J. J. Perkins, one of the veterans, still maintains his reputation for Brides and Maids, some stock last week being superb with 3 1-2 foot stems. Over 1,000 cyps pass weekly through his hands.

Riedel & Co. have a fine grade of Sunrise and Sunset among other stock and feel much encouraged with their reception into the ranks of the wholesalers.

As early as 5:30 a. m. Mr. Bradshaw was reminded last week of his 35th birthday by the delivery of an immense 5-foot horse shoe of flowers at his residence. He suspects his partner and the staff.

Leeakes & Co. are sole New York agents for W. A. Davis & Co.'s special leucothoe sprays, handling a quarter of a million yearly.

Kerwin & Co. make a specialty of small table Christmas trees and fine needle pines. Their new store on 27th street is wonderfully convenient.

David Clarke's Sons' new store is already crowded with Christmas goods, and their immense windows have all the novelties of the season. They expect a great holiday trade and are ready for it.

L. J. Kreshover is overwhelmed with orders and reports the greatest season's business in his history.

Mr. Ghormley, who was the first to use the Sefton corrugated boxes, and through whose influence the wholesale growers adopted them, speaks highly of their value and the saving effected by their use. He expects a great demand for red roses and carnations for Christmas, but looks for the usual two weeks of insufferable dullness between now and Christmas. The fall in values immediately after Thanksgiving he estimates at fully 100 per cent., and this conclusion seems to be general and well founded.

Reed & Keller are not only novelty handlers, but inventors. Their season has been beyond expectations and their extra force is busy day and night.

J. A. Millang, manager of the New York Cut Flower Co., is now being called the "Beauty King." He says Beauties are never off crop and that an extra fine crop is assured for the Christmas trade. Advance orders are numerous.

Chas. Millang finds his cut flower trade again dominant. Hyacinths and narcissus in great demand, and violets appreciated by those who can see before buying in the light of his new conservatory.

The opportunity for further accommodations for wholesale florists in the Coogan building is lost, the floor space available having a week ago been rented for other business.

The prospects generally for a fine Christmas trade in all lines are excellent. A general evidence of cheerful expectation is everywhere evident, and that all may have a very merry and profitable Christmas is the sincere wish of

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

PITTSBURG.

The Florists' Club.

In the evening the rain came down in torrents, nevertheless 24 members came to the club meeting. The talk was about Christmas greens, plants and materials. William Scow, one of our largest dealers, complained of the serious railway blockade. He has a great deal of stuff coming from the South and elsewhere that should have been here before now, but it is lost on the railways somewhere and he doesn't know where. Other dealers had similar complaints.

The firm of Gustave & Julius Ludwig exhibited a variety of Christmas materials. The Cut Flower Co. showed some neat bells made of papier mache lined inside green and covered on outside with red immortelles. They also had finely berried mistletoe from Texas, and something of a novelty from the South in the way of leafless smilax vines full of clusters of scarlet berries. It was thought these would mix up fine in holly and other evergreen wreathing. Schenley Park sent some sprays of berried shrubs.

From John Dunbar, assistant superintendent of the Rochester, N. Y., parks, came a large assortment of sprays of scarlet fruited berried shrubs, including roses, euonymus, berberis, pyrus, cratægus, celastrus, solanum, lycium and winterberry that were suggestive and much appreciated. Sprays of the brighter berried berberis mixed in among evergreen would be excellent for cemetery work, as they endure a good deal of frost with impunity. The generous panicles of little red hips of the Japanese blackberry rose (Rosa multiflora), also the vivid orange-colored fruit of Cratægus pyracantha and the bright winterberry may also be used in the same way, as they, too, are enduring. In the larger and commoner indoor Christmas decorations these hardy shrubs can likewise be used to fine advantage. Hard frost is quite injurious to the fruits of euonymus and celastrus; if these, however, are cut early in November and hung up in a shed, cool and dry, but above freezing point, they will keep very well for Christmas, indeed the celastrus, both American and Japanese species, when heavily fruited and dried, retain their ornamental character all winter long and big bushy sprays or branches of them can be used.

The Blind brothers have gone into growing Begonia Lorraine and now have it in very fine form; they brought in a little beauty of a plant with them. They bought the small plants in the East last July for $15 a hundred, and now hope to sell them for 75 cents to $1 each.

Mr. E. C. Reineman told us of some fine Lorraines he saw the other day; the grower told him he kept them very much on the dry side, and in a cool temperature, not over 50 to 55 degrees at night. In this way they endured with considerable impunity the change from the greenhouse to the city store or the customer's rooms.

Some of the boys thought there was quite a future for poinsettias here. At 25 cents a head they could make money out of them, but for a penny less they wouldn't handle them. Grow them planted out on benches with good sunshine and fair heat till in full head, then lower the temperature to stiffen them. Small pot plants and pans containing a few plants in each are much in demand and now we must send East for them. Euphorbia jacquiniæflora from the Phipps conservatory was much admired. To grow it in its greatest perfection it should be planted out on a bench.

Mr. Reineman was warmly in favor of our old friends, the bouvardias, for Christmas, and he advised some of the growers to go into it. The Cut Flower Co. said it could sell every bouvardia flower raised in town. It is now getting its supply from the South. Someone remarked if one man went into it and made money out of it then everybody would go into it. Well, that's all right, then drop it and go into something else before the others get on to that something. This is what Ernst Asmus does, and he makes money enough to terrify every moose and caribou in Canada; and Julius Roehrs did the same with the cheneille plant.

Ernest Ludwig is somewhat exercised because the expressmen fail to deliver flowers promptly and then when the florist refuses to take the boxes the express men turn around and sell them to whoever will buy them and for any price they can get for them; all they care for is to get enough to pay their express charges, and the poor grower or shipper gets nothing. We will ponder over this until the next meeting, when it and some other like things will be considered. Mr. Langhans, of the Cut Flower Co., however, suggested a reasonable remedy. "Patronize home industries, buy your flowers from the commission houses in your own town and then you'll have nothing in the way of expressmen to worry about."

A communication about the high tariff on greenhouse glass and a desire to have it removed so as to bring the glass magnates to their senses and glass down to a reasonable price came from Nathan Smith & Son, of Adrian, Mich. John Bader was loudly in favor of it, but Howard Childs, in view of the fact that the tariff question is not to be touched on by Congress this winter, thought it inexpedient that the club should do anything in the premises at this time. But when John began telling us about the fine plants he imported from Europe and the big prices he got here for them some of us thought that what he lost on glass he made up on plants. For instance, he told us of a fine imported holly that cost him six shillings in Europe he sold to a man for $5. Then he repented of his bargain and offered the man $10 for it. "Oh, no," said the customer, "if you want it back the price now is $15," so John let him keep it. P. A.

BUFFALO.

The wave of ephemeral, or otherwise, prosperity has spread its wings over this city, as it appears to have done in all other directions. The present state of trade is that there is not enough good stock to go around and often it is a miserable scramble to fill orders as you would wish. Talk about the business being overdone; it has not yet begun. I have a good friend in this city in our business, who when I tell him of such mammoth places as the Lake View Rose Gardens, of Jamestown, N. Y., or the Dale Estate, of Brampton, Ont., puts on a doleful and melancholy air and says, "My boy, it will ruin our business; stuff will be worth nothing." Perhaps he really thinks this and perhaps not. If the former, then it is only a sure indication that he is not progressing with the rest of his kind.

We have much to congratulate ourselves upon at the end of the year. When the sun is nearest the earth though its rays are most oblique and we cuddle by the stove after our daily work is done, we have time to meditate on the future of the business, and I have come to the conclusion that if I had thirteen sons, instead of only six, I would make them all horticulturists. Not that there is so much money in it as there is in a hundred other professions or trades—not to mention owning all the coal, or petroleum or railroads of the world—but it is a business or calling that is elevating, educational, and ever gives your mind food for thought. And so I repeat, we gardeners and florists have much to be thankful for, for never did our virtuous calling have such encouragement as it has today. Flowers are not a necessity; they are an accompaniment of a good and refined breeding and should be handled with as gentle care as the new born baby, or the one you love. But to see them handled in some commission houses you would think they were sides of bacon or whalebone corsets. Perhaps "familiarity breeds contempt," yet the day will come, and perhaps has come, when all persons handling flowers will have a real love for the tender things they are handling.

I took the electric elevated railroad around our city the other day, and as it passed over the Niagara gorge and then circled around twenty miles up Lake Erie to the steel plant, I visited about half a dozen of the principal greenhouses of Erie county. I found Charles Guenther on the shore growing the finest of roses, only not enough. Charlie is a gardener of the first water. At my request the train stopped at Wise Bros.', East Aurora, where Henry showed me some good roses and general stock, but the grand thing about his place was his "Imperial" violets. Whoever has grown "Marie Louise" will never grow it if they have seen "Imperial." East Aurora is the home of Elbertus Hubbard, far better known in distant parts of the United States than at home, but unique as his genius is, he has fallen down. "The darty, bad man" has been flirting with other creatures, if not more useful, newer than his dearly beloved.

We seem pretty well supplied with stock for Christmas trade. Louis H. Nenbeck has a fine stock of begonias, cyclamen and poinsettias and has made a specialty at his Corfu place of sweet peas.

Stephen Rebstock, of Williamsville, has a fine lot of flowering plants. These are mostly grown for his sister, Mrs. R. M. Rebstock, who is doing a fine trade at her Main street store.

Mrs. D. Newlands has a splendid stock of begonias, cyclamens and azaleas.

J. H. Rebstock has the largest stock of Begonia Lorraine in western New York, having some 5,000 splendid plants.

It was just called to my mind that our commission man, W. F. Kasting, might keep a larger supply of first-class stock. Now, for instance, take a man like George Fancourt. He sends what he calls first-class stock to the Big City and the seconds are sent to Buffalo. George, we will pay for the best and so will Billy.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

There has been a marked change in the conditions of trade since my last report. Business is anything but first-class, but this is always the case the week after Thanksgiving. The supply of stock at the wholesale houses has improved and there is plenty of first-class stock of all kinds in the market just now and prices are considerably lower than a week ago. We have enjoyed our first touch of real winter weather, with some snow, which has kept most of the fakirs off the streets. The downtown stores are fast assuming a Christmas appearance and most of the large houses are already decorated with wreathing and holly. The prospect for a heavy demand for ground pine and holly is good.

Chrysanthemums are well cleaned out and in another week will be about over, with the exception of some of the late varieties. With these out of the market better prices will be realized for other stock.

Violets are in fairly good supply, but not nearly enough to supply the big demand, and the price is holding up well. Californias and a few doubles are the only varieties in this market.

The demand for good roses was rather light the past week and plenty were left over after the morning sales. The quality of Brides, Maids, Meteors, Perles and Gates that are coming in is fine. Beauties seemed more plentiful than for some time past and prices remain about the same as quoted last week.

As yet no Harrisii have made their appearance, although some are expected soon.

Carnations are in good demand and the supply big. Some fine Lawsons, White Clouds, Nelsons, Cranes and Daybreaks were seen the past week, very few of which were left over when they were first class. Some of Witterstaetter's Enquirer and Dorner's Morning Glory were picked up quickly.

Paper whites are overplentiful but fine in quality; Romans not quite so many and are selling well. The valley that comes to this market is very fine and is always in good demand. No other bulb stock is in yet. All kinds of greens are selling well. The smilax in this market is of exceptionally fine quality.

Trade Notes.

Frank M. Ellis reports some large shipping orders the past week in supplies and cut flowers. Mr. Ellis says that his big advertisement in the REVIEW almost doubled his business, and that it's surely a business bringer.

Mr. C. A. Kuehn is having a big business in supplies, cut flowers and wire work. In the wire department all hands are busy with Christmas designs for local and outside dealers.

Henry Berning receives a large amount of stock each morning, and a good local and shipping trade is reported. The St. Louis Carnation Co.'s stock is a good seller at this place.

The above reports speak well for our wholesalers, as does the large amount of stuff they dispose of every morning to the trade, and no doubt they will have their hands full the remainder of the year.

Various Items.

George M. Kellogg, of Pleasant Hill, Mo., spent Sunday in St. Louis calling on the trade.

Frank H. Weber, lately with George M. Kellogg, at Kansas City, is back in St. Louis looking for a location to open a retail store.

I paid a visit to my old friend, Frank Fillmore, on Sunday last. Frank is now using soft coal and is much pleased with his new heating apparatus. On looking through the houses I found everything clean, as usual. His carnations are in fine condition and he regards Hoosier Maid among the best for white. Flora Hill, Nelson and Marquis also come in for a good deal of praise. The rose houses are also in good shape and his Brides, Maids, Perles and Meteors look as though a heavy crop will be in for Christmas. A fine bench of callas was seen, which ought to swell Frank's bank account. Mrs. Fillmore raffled one of their large araucarias last week. Ticket 133, held by F. C. Weber, won the plant, which is valued at $15. The remainder of the evening was pleasantly spent in company with Mr. and Mrs. Fillmore, F. C. Weber and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Kuehn and Mrs. Beneke.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Winter arrived with a vengeance last Saturday and several days of zero weather have played havoc with the coal supply. The sudden arrival of such bitterly cold weather has had a depressing rather than a stimulating effect upon demand, and there is sufficient stock to meet demands except Beauties and violets. Were the demand normal there would be a serious shortage in all roses and carnations.

While the quality is excellent in spots it is desperately poor in many cases, and the average is only fair. Only a few have roses that can be classed as "specials," and there are not many of these taking the market as a whole. With the majority $8 is the top quotation and we hear of sales of job lots of poor stock at unpleasantly low rates for the season. Of carnations there is a dollar grade, too frequently in evidence. While a few fancies are sold at $6 and a few extra Prosperity as high as $7, they are so few as to be hardly considered. The great bulk of the good stock does not reach above $3. Violets average poor in quality and few bring the top quotations.

E. E. Pieser, of Kennicott Bros. Co., says he has never before seen such a large percentage of "punk" in the market at this season.

As to the outlook for Christmas, it is yet a guess. Several growers talk encouragingly as to a fair supply, but others are pessimistic. Nearly all agree that there is more likelihood of a fair supply of Beauties than of any other rose. Several express the belief that there will be a shortage of carnations.

Notes.

Wietor Bros. met with a serious loss last Friday night through the burning of their large barn. It contained eleven horses, of which seven were lost and two others seriously injured. All were valuable horses, one team having been bought for $475 only recently. In addition to the horses many implements and wagons were destroyed. The insurance was for $1,900, and will cover only a small part of the loss.

Dealers in holiday greens report a brisk demand for same and indications of a very heavy business in these goods.

Mrs. C. L. Washburn's condition offered no encouragement at last report. Mr. Washburn and Mr. Bassett are both still with her at Alma, Mich.

Mrs. A. M. Schafer suffered some loss through the cracking of a boiler during the severe firing Sunday.

Mr. A. Duebendorfer, florist at the State Agricultural College, Ames, Ia., and his family, are spending a week in Chicago visiting relatives.

Mr. N. Wietor, of Wietor Bros., is the happy father of another boy, who arrived last week on Wednesday.

Mr. Samuel Pearce also welcomed another boy on the same day.

Mr. A. McAdams is laid up with a slight attack of sciatica.

James Hartshorne, of the Chicago Carnation Co., is on a trip East.

Recent visitors: C. W. Reimers, Louisville, Ky.; J. N. May, Summit, N. J.; John Burton, of Philadelphia; H. M. Altick, Dayton, O.; George Souster, Elgin, Ill.

BLIND WOOD.

My roses are sending up much new wood or shoots, but they are largely blind. They were somewhat neglected in the summer, but have been fed and cared for since. What is the reason, and is there any way to prevent it in the future? INQUIRER.

The most prolific cause of so much blind wood is failing to stake and train the plants in proper time. When this is neglected and the plants allowed to scramble over the bench the wood becomes thin and weak and produces little else than blind wood.

Of course there are other conditions which will bring about a like result such as poor soil, and want of proper ventilation.

If these are tea roses a judicious thinning out of the small blind wood will help to strengthen the remaining eyes. The shoots which are now forming will also receive a greater share of sustenance, which with care in watering and free ventilation should in a short time produce a crop of buds. RIBES.

WASHINGTON, IA.—E. C. Keck now has his office and retail greenhouses at 223 West Washington street, the wholesale houses being about a mile out. He is just completing the erection of two new houses there containing 10,000 feet of glass. The retail place, just completed, contains 7,000 feet of glass.

A CHRISTMAS present of a copy of the Florists' Manual, by Wm. Scott, to an employe would benefit you as well as the recipient, because it would make him a more valuable employe.

Seed Trade News.

PHILADELPHIA.—Walter P. Stokes thinks the prospects for next season's business are very bright. The conditions are the most remarkable in his experience of twenty-five years. The farmers and truck growers, both here and in the West, made money last season, and have confidence to increase their sowing. The shortage in seed of certain varieties is a serious obstacle. Early varieties of peas have suffered severely; also some of the best novelties in other vegetables. One case was instanced where 1,200 pounds of seed had been ordered with the expectation of receiving at least 1,000 pounds; not even 200 pounds will be forthcoming. It is probable, Mr. Stokes says, that the use of less popular kinds will help till the shortage in some varieties, and heavier sowing of varieties obtainable will further relieve the situation. He feels, however, that it will be impossible to fully satisfy the demand and that prices will naturally advance over those of last season. In view of these facts, coming from such a source, every seed buyer should consult his seedsman about next season's supply in good time.

PHIL.

BALTIMORE.—The Griffith & Turner Company says: "There appears to be quite an awakening among the farmers and truckers in this section, judging from the brisk demand for seeds so early in the season, and the outlook for a good business in this line for the ensuing year seems very bright. But there is a scarcity in some kinds of stock seeds, more especially with wax beans, cucumbers and muskmelons, and prices will be high. It was at one time thought that the supply of seed peas would be short, but later reports are more encouraging. Crops have been good and brought good prices, and the planters feel encouraged. Vegetables were of finer quality than has been the case for some years, owing, we think, more particularly to absence of the destroying insects. The pea louse, which has been so destructive, has almost entirely disappeared. Because of good crops, good prices and comparative freedom from the insect pest, the planters are intending increasing their acreage for another year."

TROY, N. Y.—The pumpkin seed crop looks very dubious for us around here. The farmers in our immediate vicinity usually have a large surplus of "Conn. Field" pumpkin, but this year the crop is as short as it was last season. We have thoroughly canvassed this section of the country, but can find no pumpkin seed for sale at any price. At the canning factories farmers are receiving more than twice as much for their pumpkins as in former years. Recent visitors: James B. Kidd, with Cox Seed Co., San Francisco; Mr. Sloan, of D. L. Sloan & Son, Palo Alto, Cal.; John E. Goewey, of D. Landreth & Son, Philadelphia.

OTTAWA, ONT.—Graham Bros. say that in the pea district a hundred miles west of here, both peas and beans are exceedingly scarce. Timothy, which is produced in considerable quantities in the Province of Quebec, is not threshed out yet. The price follows Chicago quotations. Clovers, both Early Red and Alsike, in the clover district about two hundred miles west of here, are this season a fair crop and quality good. It is said that the demand for export to Europe is heavy.

PHILADELPHIA.—Charles H. MacKubbin says that his firm, Henry A. Dreer, expect to be able to meet the demand for nearly all vegetable seeds next season, except early peas, wax beans and cucumbers. On these three he fears a shortage, especially on cucumbers. He does not think the advance in prices will deter the market from buying seed, although it may somewhat influence their choice of varieties and will make them more cautious. Speaking of market gardening, Mr. MacKubbin said that, while the very large profits of a few years ago could hardly be made today, the business was a good one, yielding a fair margin of profit to the successful growers.

VISITED CHICAGO—J. M. Kimberlin, Santa Clara, Cal.; J. R. Horne, of Cox Seed Co., San Francisco; C. N. Page, of Iowa Seed Co., DesMoines, Io.

CHARLES P. BRASLAN, of the Braslan Seed Grower Association, San Jose, Cal., was suddenly taken sick with congestion of the lungs at Atchison, Kas. Mrs. Olga Braslan and two doctors are looking after the patient.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—The Vail Seed Co. of this city, was placed in the hands of a receiver Dec. 6th.

The inevitable dullness in the cut flower trade, always characteristic of the two weeks preceding Christmas, is now in evidence. All prices show a loss of 20 per cent from last week's quotations, and in some lines the depreciation is greater. Even "specials" have gone backward and there is no reason to expect a change for the better before the 20th of the month.

Trade good all around. White flowers just now in greatest demand; white carnations not in sufficient supply for demand. Violets continue very scarce—many of our largest growers having abandoned their culture. Roses, good ones especially, are not abundant. Greens are in plentiful supply. R.

The market is nearly all that could be wished for; flowers for funeral work are missed the most. Long-stemmed roses are fine, and enough to go around. In carnations white is the only color short. The growers make a great mistake in this respect, as white is seldom, if ever, a glut. Prices are satisfactory to the growers and retailers don't seem to have a kick coming. Poinsettias are fine and of good keeping quality. Violets are up to the standard and sell well. A goodly number of orchids are used in fancy decorations. DILGER.

PRONUNCIATION.

The Market.

The past week started out with a scarcity of stock, and continued during all the week. Carnations headed the list in this respect, especially red ones, which were far short of the demand. Whites were the most in evidence, but there were not nearly enough of them. In fancy pinks Dorothy was most in evidence, but Enquirer and Lawson were the most sought for. There have been no changes in the prices as quoted last week, except perhaps in the poorer grades.

Roses are in fair supply, with a larger percentage of good stock than at any time so far this season, but many more could be very easily disposed of. Some extra good stock is to be seen, and it brings a good price. Liberties are shortening up at present. Long-stemmed Beauties are in better supply and meet a steady demand.

Violets are very scarce and there is a general rush for what few are to be had. The best have reached $2 per 100. Valley is scarcely equal to the demand. Harrisii lilies are coming in nicely and sell well. Romans and narcissus do fairly well.

There is a good supply of all kinds of green goods and there is a good demand for it. Asparagus Sprengeri goes especially well. Leucothoe sprays and ilex berries will be features of many holiday decorations this winter.

We had a real touch of winter last Sunday night, when the thermometer went down to 8 degrees above zero, with the wind blowing almost a gale.

Various Items.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Society will be held Saturday evening, Dec. 13th. A good meeting is expected.

Frank Huntsman had a narrow escape from losing his home and greenhouses by fire. It started in an out-building and for a while looked very threatening, but was extinguished after a loss of about $100.

R. A. Kelly reports business very good, especially in the holiday decoration line.

Jim Allan has returned from Boston, after a long visit with relatives.

W. Murphy has about 60,000 cuttings of Murphy's White carnations already in the sand, with most of them rooted. He is making the first shipment of them this week.

Huntsman & Co. are cutting some very nice poinsettias.

James Hartshorne, of Joliet, Ill., was in town last Saturday and accompanied by R. Witterstaetter, called upon the carnation men of the city.

I regret greatly to report the death of the wife of John Lodder, the well-known florist of Hamilton, Ohio. Her death, which occurred Sunday afternoon, although expected for several days, was nevertheless a great shock to the family. The funeral services were held Wednesday morning, at St. Joseph's church. The entire craft joins in deep sympathy for the bereaved family.

Visitors were: Martin Reukauf, of Philadelphia; Miss White, of Lexington, Ky.; James Hartshorne, of Joliet, Ill.

C. J. Ohmer.

A CHRISTMAS VERSE.

Again Mr. Hartman, of New York, has been overshadowed by the spirit of poesy, and here is the result:

Thanksgiving we've not forgotten, that day of turkey and pie,
And the holly from Bradshaw & Hartman that greeted the passers-by.
We thought we had enough to supply the Thanksgiving demand,
But it was a case of telegraph to keep a few on hand.
Again the "Old Dominion" will come laden to the brim,
And the XXXX holly for B. & H. will keep us in the swim.
Satisfaction we will give you, and the glad hand and good cheer,
So to you all a Merry Christmas and a very happy year.

The Foley Mfg. Co., Chicago, has issued a very attractive and helpful catalogue of their greenhouse construction material. There are several half-tone engravings of ranges of greenhouses erected with their material and numerous drawings showing sections of houses of various styles, together with details of the various parts. The frontispiece consists of a combination of snap shot photographs taken by Mr. Foley at the convention at Asheville last August.

Why not establish closer relations with your employes by making them Christmas presents this year? And if you do, you cannot find anything that will be so acceptable and of so much mutual benefit as copies of the Florists' Manual, by Wm. Scott.

ORANGE, N. J.

At the meeting of the New Jersey Floricultural Society on December 3, the annual election took place, which resulted as follows: George Smith, garderer for Sidney Colgate, president, by the unanimous vote of the society; William Bennet, gardener for Mr. Van Gasbeck, vice-president; Joseph A. Manda, secretary; Malcolm MacRorie, gardener for Dr. H. A. Mandeville, treasurer.

The entertainment for the evening consisted of stereopticon views of celebrated gardens of England, France and Germany, interspersed with flower slides, made largely by John McGowan, florist, and loaned to the society, with explanatory remarks by J. B. Davis, chairman of the lecture committee. J. B. D.

A STATEMENT.

Mr. Isaac A. Passmore, West Chester, Pa., sends us the following statement regarding his new carnations:

"The carnation Dora, as advertised by me, has for some unknown reason failed to come up to the standard for keeping the past month, and I feel that while it is steadily improving, it is not as it now stands what I felt it was. All other points are above the average, but without that a flower is worthless. Last winter Mr. Mutt, of S. S. Pennock's, reported that they used it in filling orders for Florida and it carried well. I will root but few more than I wish to try again, but will furnish pips if desired as advertised.

"Marian is proving all I claimed for it. It is an improvement over Hill. Does business from early to late and does not burst the calyx."

I enclose subscriptions for two employes as well as a renewal of my own. I am sure that I will get the benefit of it if they read your valuable paper.

A CHRYSANTHEMUM SERMON.

The Sunday prior to the opening of the Chicago exhibition the Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones preached a "Sermon of the Chrysanthemum," and dedicated it to the Chrysanthemum Society of America and the Horticultural Society of Chicago. He said:

"I plead with these societies to help us realize the democracy of beauty, the popular element in true art. The hunger of the human soul for the beautiful is universal. The love of flowers is planted deep in child and woman's heart, whether they live on Halsted street or on Drexel boulevard. I want to see the time when the churches in connection with the public schools will arrange for great floral exhibits among the children of our schools, the homes of our artisans, as well as in the conservatories of the wealthy. Possibly among this artisan class today lies the sincerest love of flowers, the keenest appreciation of beauty found in Chicago.

"Oh, there is a democracy in beauty! there is character making power in flowers. Patriotism can be grown in a garden, and we will never have true patriots and great statesmen, much less Christians worthy the Nazarene leadership, until we democratize our tastes, convert these industries of leisures, these societies in the interest of the elegant, into democratic centers of the beautiful that will awake a passion for public weal."

A copy of the Florists' Manual by Wm. Scott, makes a most acceptable Christmas present to an employe or a friend in the trade. It costs only $5, and, being a reference book, its value increases with use.

The Market.

You may label me a false prophet—or profit—whichever way suits you best. Last week I insisted that there would be no cause to look for lower figures again until spring; but ever since then a stagnation has existed that no cut in prices could break, unless the goods were very good indeed. In the latter case no cut in price was neeessary, as everything in that class kept moving quite freely, there being really a limited supply of it.

Thanksgiving day did give the chrysanthemum business a good farewell benefit, indeed. There does not seem to be much left but the scrapings of the benches, and a two-dollar bill may be expected to surround the best twelve blooms nowadays.

There is but little worthy of remark during the present state of things. Lilies have been out of the market for a week or two, but are now coming in slowly from Eaton's greenhouses, and selling well. Mignonette has made rather a slim showing so far, and is probably more scarce than anything else of a seasonable nature.

The incorporation of the firm of Thomas F. Galvin causes more comment than anything else just now. It was done under the laws of New Jersey, with a capital stock of $250,000. Have you seen the fine new sidewalk tower clock at the Back Bay establishment?

Under the pressure of the coal situation several growers have experimented with some of the many forms of oil burners in the market, but I hear of no real satisfaction from their use. Too, a pet way for them to do bnsiness seems to be to get a deposit with the order and then appear to be too busy to install the machine. J. S. Manter.

DOES BUSINESS.

Owing to the many orders sent us as the result of our advertisements of surplus stock in the Review, we have been obliged to return checks and orders to customers.

We are more than delighted with the Review as an advertising medium. In our opinion it is unequalled.

Plants for the Holidays.

You make a mistake if you buy Araucaria Excelsa from some other firm, as it is impossible for any other firm to give you such value for the money as we can. Why? Because we make a specialty of them; filling our houses in early April with the best to be found in Europe, raised from top cuttings only. All must be sold before Christmas to make room for Easter plants.

TORONTO.

Trade during the last week has been, on the whole, good; some of the dealers report an off day, but they generally have an extra good one to offset that. Carnations and violets are now showing the effects of the over-rush in the mild weather earlier in the season and are quoted decidedly scarce by nearly all of the wholesale men. Roses are gradually coming to the front, and what looked like a scarcity of roses for Xmas three weeks ago now points to a fairly good supply, and very good stuff.

We are now seeing some nice Begonia Gloire de Lorraine. Especially noticeable are those grown by Jay & Son and the Toronto Floral Co., the plants of the latter being especially nice in size and shape. The Toronto Floral Co. also just put in a new forcing frame for valley, which will increase the supply of these very valuable flowers in the Toronto market.

A visitor to the city this week was Mr. R. H. Wright, of Ottawa, who reports that his range of greenhouses, which he had the misfortune to have burnt down, is rebuilt complete, and that he has especially made a success this season of growing Beauties. We would be inclined to advise him to put in a full range of Beauties if he were certain of making a success of them every season.

The regular monthly meeting of the Toronto Horticultural Society was held in St. George's Hall on Tuesday evening, December 2. The principal part of the meeting was taken up by the distribution of the prizes won by the members during the summer. The Horticultural Society has been endeavoring to educate its members by a system of exhibits at every meeting. These exhibits are examined by judges who award so many points for merit, and if the article exhibited is considered to be well-grown in every respect it is awarded 10 points; inferior stock awarded proportionately. These points represent so much money, and it has been found to give the members not only a certain amount of enthusiasm in the honor of being prize winners, but it also keeps them in a better financial position. Mr. W. R. Brock, M. P., distributed the prizes, the principal winners of which were, in the professional class, Messrs. McHardy, W. Jay, G. Mills and T. Manton; in the amateur class, Messrs. Rook, Chenery, Poulton and Tyrrell. These received checks from $25 down, and the recipients will no doubt find it very handy when they meet the coal man. D. J.

WARSAW, IND.—Beyer Bros. are no longer in the greenhouse business. The greenhouses are now operated by Mr. Ben Hains for the Winona Assembly and Summer School at Winona Lake.

WE MAKE a special rate on five or more copies of the Florists' Manual when they are to be used as Christmas presents to employes.

NOVELTIES for 1903 NEW CARNATIONS NOVELTIES for 1903

MRS. THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

We are now booking orders for our

New Dark Pink Carnation

(WARD.)

This is a seedling, the result of five generations of pedigree crossing; the original parentage being the varieties Winter Cheer, Meteor, Triumph, Bridesmaid and Mrs. Jas. Dean.

Color—A brilliant shade of deep cerise pink with a carmine or scarlet tinge at the center. The color is so brilliant that it is taken for a scarlet under electric light.

Size—From 3 to 3½ inches.

Form—The center is full and high, supported by broad guard petals of great substance, forming a symetrical flower.

Calyx—Strong, well formed, and the petals stand well out from the calyx, thus avoiding all chance of bursting.

Stem—Strong, averaging from 18 inches to two ft. in length and holding the flower erect.

Habit of growth is first-class in every respect; produces strong, vigorons plants, and thus far has not been affected to any extent with fungus diseases of any description.

Constitution is healthy and vigorous. It is an early, free and continuous bloomer under ordinary culture, the first blooms coming with stems of good length so that there is none of the objection to the short stemmed flowers as is the case with the Mrs. Lawson. Under exactly the same treatment it will produce a third more blooms than Lawson, upon the same bench space, with stems averaging about six inches longer.

It possesses a strong, rich clove fragrance and sells upon the New York market at the top market prices.

Having a large stock of plants (4000) we shall be able to guarantee full delivery during the months of February and March. We shall limit the propagation to 50,000 cuttings, all of which will be selected with a view of perpetuating its splendid qualities.

BRIDAL FLOWERS.

Orange blossoms are the first flower thought of in connection with weddings. The Saracens used orange blossoms to crown their brides, and regarded them as the emblems of happiness and prosperity. The fruit has also its association with the hymeneal altar, as the golden apple presented by Jupiter to June on the day of their nuptials is supposed to have been an orange. In Sardinia it is customary to attach oranges to the horns of the oxen which draw the nuptial conveyance. Brides and bridegrooms also are sprinkled with orange flower water, and in ancient times the bridal bed was decorated with sprigs of rosemary and orange blossoms. The Germans, who use wreaths of myrtle, consider this vine symbolic of purity and fertility, and for the same reason the Roman bridegroom wore a crown of myrtle, while the bride's wreath was of roses and myrtle. Myrtle was said to be a favorite of Venus, the goddess of love, and is symbolic of love. In Prussia, however, it is held to be an evil omen for a bride to plant myrtle, and in other parts of the German empire verbena wreaths replace the myrtle. In other parts of this same country a hat made of verbenas is presented to the newmade wife, and is supposed to place her under the special protection of Venus Victrix.

In former times rosemary was considered the bridal flower, and was entwined in wreaths and dipped in scented water. In Greece the altar is entwined with it and the priest presents a branch to both the bride and bridegroom as a symbol of the indissoluble knot of matrimony, while the wreaths of the bridal couple are, in some parts of this land, composed of poppies. In old Roman times, poppy wreaths were only worn by married women, supposed to indicate, by their brightness, the joy and happiness of married life. In other parts of the Greek isles brides wear hyacinth wreaths instead of orange blossoms. In Tripoli all bridal gifts are sent covered with flowers.

Rose crowns sometimes were worn as bride-wreaths, being especially love's flower, but the lily of the valley, now so often used as the bridal flower, was called virgin's tears and was considered most unlucky as a wedding flower.

COST OF BUILDING.

I desire information in regard to building greenhouses. Wish to know the cost of about three 50-foot houses, one for roses, one for carnations and the other for general stock. At least that is my idea of what I would need. Wish to raise a general stock to supply a town of 25,000. Please tell me what houses of that kind would cost, without counting the land; also what it would cost to stock same, and what would be the best method of heating. Am I right in thinking I could get a good foreman at $60 a month and house rent?

J. H. S.

As these houses would be used for different plants at a varied temperature, and as the inquirer would look for only the best results which could come only from the most approved form of construction, these houses should be detached with 18 or 20 feet between the houses and upright or side light on both north and south walls. The length of these proposed houses is given, but no width; cost will naturally depend on that. We will suppose they are to be 50 feet long and from 18 to 20 feet wide, using cypress material for sash bars, red cedar posts and double thick glass, 16x24 in size, well heated with hot water, which is the better method for this size of range.

Before giving any figures I would like to say that labor enters quite largely into cost, and if you are at the mercy of a carpenter who never built a greenhouse, and you are not practical yourself, it will be a disadvantage. Yet, there are now so many thoroughly reliable firms that make a specialty of greenhouse material and design that they will either supply you with all material ready to erect or put it up for you, which, if it costs some more, is quickly and perfectly done. If the latter plan is followed I would rather not give figures, but if you are able to direct the work yourself, and with handy men for your assistants, then $12 per lineal foot of greenhouse should complete the whole job. That is for all material of every kind, heating, ventilating and benches all ready to receive your stock.

The cost of stock for these three houses is a more difficult question to answer. If you have no stock to draw from, then put down for roses, $75, for carnations $50. As for the mixed stock for the third house, that would depend whether you were going into chrysanthemums, lilies, azaleas and bedding plants, or choice young palms, Farleyense ferns and orchids. But the latter is not likely, so figure on $150 to start you off with a general assortment of desirable stock.

Sixty dollars per month and house rent should procure a very competent man to run a place of this size.

If I have not made myself clear on cost I will repeat that 150 lineal feet of greenhouse at $12 per foot is $1,800; connecting shed, $300; stock, $275; total, $2,375. There is no estimate here for office or safe, but possibly the proceeds in currency could be carried in your pockets for the first year.

In conclusion, while you are building make the houses 100 feet long each, for you are sure to do it later and at more expense.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

PRIMULAS AND CYCLAMEN.

We have on many occasions drawn attention to the great care with which Messrs. E. Webb and Sons, of Wordsley, Stourbridge, prosecute their business of florists and seedsmen.

Wordsley cyclamens have long been famous for the profusion with which they bloom and the shapeliness of the specimens. The Perfection strain is remarkable for breadth and substance of petal, and for the very graceful form of the flowers. There are both red and white varieties, and both are of great excellence. For a white variety, however, it would be difficult to improve upon Mont Blanc, which under good cultivation becomes a veritable mound of snowy blossoms. Rose Queen is charming in hue, and forms a link between Mont Blanc and Vesuvius. The latter is a vivid crimson-red variety of great beauty, and one that provides a splendid contrast to the pure white forms.

Primulas are even more popular and more extensively grown than cyclamen, and at Wordsley they receive the attention that their importance demands. Besides the Exquisite strain, in red and white, and the grand old Scarlet Emperor, there are several varieties of wondrous beauty and freedom. Limits of space prevent a detailed account of the whole series of varieties, but mention must be made of such fine new forms as Snow Queen, which has prettily fringed flowers of purest white with orange center; Purity, one of the giant forms, white with large sulphur eye; Rosy Morn, light carmine rose, finely frilled; Modesty, white, shading to delicate pink when fully opened, splendid habit, and very easy to cultivate; and Blue Belle, a dwarf compact grower with light blue blooms.—Gardeners' Magazine.

APHIS ON VIOLETS.

I am having trouble with brown aphides in my violets which are grown in frames. I have a book on violets which describes hydrocyanic gas for houses, but I don't know whether it will work in frames, as they are so low that there is not room for jars and are more open than a house, and gas is liable to escape before spreading over the entire frame. I have fifty sash in lots of ten each. Would like your advice, or any other remedy you may know.

C. B. W.

Possibly the sash is not more than 1 foot or 15 inches above the ground and it would be very awkward to use the gas. Still it might be done by sinking the jars into the ground. There would, I fear, be danger of the gas being quite dense near the jar and little felt at a distance from it. I can't say what formula C. B. W. has been using, but the following I used last winter, which destroyed the fly and did no harm to the violets: Five ounces cyanide of potash, 1 quart sulphuric acid, 1 quart water. This quantity for 2,000 feet of air space, and keep the ventilators closed all night. The formula we first gained knowledge of was the above quantities for 1,000 cubic feet of air, and to open the ventilators in one-half hour. If you attempt to use the gas in the frames where cubic air space is very limited it would be better to use but 2½ ounces of the cyanide and 1 pint each of the acid and water.

If taken in time, or if you had begun in early fall to dust the violets weekly with Stoothoff's tobacco dust, you would have no aphis, either green, black or brown, and it will go far toward killing them now. Wait until the violets need more water, then after the foliage is dry, dust each plant and see that it is evenly and lightly spread. It is of course down in the heart of the plant among the very young leaves and buds that the mischief is done, but you must not smother the plants with the tobacco dust. After three days syringe the plants clean, and repeat the dose of dust in ten days. The tobacco dust that you get from the local cigar maker is not the thing. You will see in the advertising columns of the Review the quality you want, which I think is only $2 per 100 pounds.

CHICAGO CARNATION CO., JOLIET, ILL.

PITTSBURG.

The demand for all kinds of flowers was very good last week. The only noticeable change in the market was the shortening up on the fancy grades of carnations. Just about enough roses, carnations, valley, narcissus, Romans and Beauties, etc., are being cut to meet the demand. Prices average a little less than last week.

The many debutantes, teas and weddings called for large quantities of fine stock; these orders cleaned up the better grades of flowers and allowed the cheaper grades to linger.

John Foss had the decoration for the opening of Rosenbaum's department store. As souvenirs, roses and carnations were distributed liberally.

PRESIDENT McKINLEY.

WINNER OF THE $100 PRIZE AT KANSAS CITY FLOWER SHOW IN 1901, AND FIRST ON VASE OF 100 DARK PINK AT KANSAS CITY IN 1902.

This is what Edwin A. Kanst, one of the awarding judges, said of it: "President McKinley is a splendid flower. The petals are perfect, and it is well built. The color is deeper and brighter than the Lawson and the coloring is more distinct. The peculiar purplish tinge in the Lawson is absent from the President McKinley. It will become a favorite carnation."

This variety, like its parent Dorothy, is wonderfully free, also very early and an excellent keeper and shipper.

Rooted Cuttings ready Jan. 1, 1903. PRICE: $2 per doz; $12 per 100; $100 per 1000.

Early struck cuttings of all the leading varieties of Carnations, also Chrysanthemums and Roses. We guarantee our stock to be satisfactory.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

The State Florists' Association held its December meeting on the 2nd, but owing to bad weather and a party going up to New Castle for the day there were not many present. President Haugh was in the chair. It was decided to offer for competition the silver and the bronze medals of the S. A. F. at the January meeting and as there are a good many good things in the way of new carnations and roses and perhaps a few other things in the state, there should be some lively competition. It calls for any new plant or blooms that are not in commerce. Only members of the society are eligible for competition, I understand. There will be meetings in the afternoon and evening and a supper will be arranged for. A full attendance is requested and much important business is to come before the meeting.

Baur & Smith showed some blooms of their new pink carnation "Indianapolis" and a few blooms of a fine large scarlet named "The News." The variety "Indianapolis" is a fine bold flower of large size and good form and supported by a strong upright stem. The color is the brightest of pink carnations with not a trace of blue or yellow in it. This is to be disseminated in 1904.

We were favored a few days ago with a visit from that hustling young man from Joliet, and with him he had a bunch of as fine blooms as we have ever seen of a crimson carnation. They were of their new variety, Harlowarden, and this must be a wonderful variety, to produce such blooms this early. Of course, they won an order for some cuttings. Their Her Majesty is another one you want to give a trial and I mistake if you do not add it to your list of standard varieties.

Trade has been very good ever since 'mums have been out of the way and prices are stiffening steadily on all kinds of stock. A very warm October and most of November has somewhat unsettled the growers' calculations for Christmas and in some lines stock is going to be very scarce, but on the whole a good supply is expected. Begonia de Lorraine is being grown in large quantities by the leading retailers and they find ready sale. Cyclamen are also in fine shape as also are poinsettias. Carnations are fine in quality and quantity fair, roses the same. A. B.

R. Vincent, Jr., & Son, White Marsh, Md., sent a collection of outdoor-grown pompons that was a record breaker—some sixty varieties; and the best lot I ever saw at any chrysanthemum exhibition. More interest was manifested in this charming display than in the omnipresent Timothy Eaton and Col. D. Appleton. The demand for these plants is steadily increasing for planting in the herbaceous border, and among shrubbery and evergreens.

I compliment you on having such a fine selection of Pompon Chrysanthemums.

A. HERRINGTON,
President Chrysanthemum Society of America.

NEW CARNATIONS.

Registered by the Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill.

"Crusader." Color bright scarlet, produces two-foot stems by October 1, is an extra early blooming and healthy variety, never having shown any signs of disease.

"Chaperon." Color pure white, a large full flower the form of which is perfect, slightly fringed, an early, free and continuous bloomer.

"Fiancee," registered last week without description, is described as follows: Color a lively bright pink, a shade unapproached by any variety of carnation at this time. Growth strong and healthy with no superfluous grass, every break making a rapid advance and producing a long-stemmed flower. Size from three and one-half to four inches with a depth of two inches. Form nearest Bradt but with much greater depth. Stem always sufficiently strong to hold up the large flower, average length two feet. Calyx perfect, of the Albertini type. Blooming qualities the earliest of all, free and continuous throughout the entire season.

CHRISTMAS GREENS.

Ten thousand cut Palmetto leaves, all intended for the Chicago market, have been carried away by high floods in Louisiana.

There is likely to be a short supply of Christmas trees, owing to the mild weather in Wisconsin. The swamps being open, it was impossible to get all the trees cut out in time.

Local Wisconsin speculators in bouquet green are just beginning to dump their stock on the Chicago market and prices have declined fully 25 per cent on this article. The few days remaining now for working up this stock will not allow time to work up all the bouquet green that will be thrown on the market.

W. W. Barnard & Co., Chicago, report that their Eastern holly is arriving in very good condition and opens up very fine. The exceedingly cold weather of the last few days did not hurt the holly in the least.

The first express shipments of mistletoe have just reached the Chicago market in excellent condition—well berried stock of good color.

CARDS FOR FUNERAL FLOWERS.

Some time since you asked me to say something to readers of the Review on the use of cards with flowers; I think in answer to an inquiry.

Not long since we sent one with flowers for a funeral that seemed to be a little out of the ordinary, and, while the inscription was rather long, it was still appropriate and might be suggestive to anyone wishing to construct something similar.

On one side the card bore the following:

> "In loving remembrance of Valentine Rose by those whose privilege it was to call him their 'Uncle Val.'"

And on the other side:

> "Valentine Rose.
> A Peaceful Citizen, a Consistent Christian, an Honorable Man."

Dear Sir: I have used your Wire Carnation Supports for the last two years, in all about 12,000. They fill the bill in every particular. Nothing could be more satisfactory, and it would give me a great deal of pleasure if I can bespeak a good word for you to the trade, and you are at liberty to refer to me at any time.

Yours very truly,
A. L. THORNE.

Dear Sir:—After using your Model carnation support in two of our houses the past winter we have come to the conclusion that it is perfectly adapted to supporting carnation plants and shall use them on all our plants the coming season. We were much pleased with the simplicity, strength and neat appearance of the support. Yours truly,

HOT WATER CIRCULATION.

I have two houses 18x100, each heated with two overhead 2-inch pipes, each of which go under a bench into three 4-inch cast iron pipes. The circulation is exceedingly slow all around, under one bench particularly the cast iron pipes do not warm up and in hard firing only to the center of the house, the other half remaining cold. Under the other benches the cast iron pipes get warm, but not to the degree they should. The overhead pipes are very warm.

Can you suggest a reason and a remedy for the pipes under the bench remaining cold half way? In general I think the three 4-inch cast iron pipes on each 2-inch flow are too much to return, yet only under one bench (on north side, too) do they remain cold half way.

ENQUIRER.

The trouble to which Enquirer refers may be due to several causes, the most probable being the fact that a 2-inch main, 100 feet long, is too small to satisfactorily feed 300 lineal feet of 4-inch cast iron pipes for returns, and also the want of sufficient direct vertical fall from the return main back to the boiler.

I cannot advise definitely as to the best method of overcoming the troubles without more detail as to grades of pipes, depth of boiler below coils, size or capacity of boiler, size of mains from and to the boiler and arrangement of expansion tank and air vents.

HENRY W. GIBBONS.

New York.

PIPING.

Will six lines of 2-inch steam pipe heat a house 24x84, side walls 3 ft. and 7 ft. to peak? No glass in side walls. Pipes are on sides and overhead. Feed pipes are on each side, about 8 ft. apart, and returns are two lines on each line of side posts. Boiler is in end of house and get some heat from it. Outside temperature sometimes drops to 10 to 15 degrees below zero. I wish to maintain 50 to 60 degrees in the house.

J. H. H.

With the six lines of 2-inch pipes full of steam at 4 or 5 lbs. pressure he can maintain 50 degrees in the greenhouse in the coldest weather. Two-inch pipes are not desirable for steam circulation. It would be better to use a larger number of pipes of smaller diameter for the coils.

FLORISTS' FOIL

PLAIN, EMBOSSED, COLORED.

The Standard Foil of America.

MANUFACTURED BY

THE JOHN J. CROOKE CO.

ESTABLISHED 1850.

186 Grand St., NEW YORK. 149 Fulton St., CHICAGO.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

The advent of the cold snap and many receptions during the past week improved business to some extent, but am afraid that so much cloudy weather will cause it to decline again. Beauties will be scarce and bring top notch prices. Carnations will be plentiful, also Romans, narcissus and violets.

The regular monthly meeting of the Kentucky Society of Florists was held at Jacob Schulz's store on Dec. 3, at 8:30 o'clock and a good crowd was present. The election of officers took place and resulted as follows: Wm. Mann, president; Jacob Schulz, vice-president; Jos. Coenen, financial secretary; Hy. Lichtefeld, secretary; C. H. Kunzman, treasurer; Jno. Bohrman, trustee. The club is in good financial standing.

Jacob Schulz's carnation houses are almost like a wheat field—buds and flowers until the eye can see no more. His seedlings are very fine, having some very promising ones amongst them.

C. H. Kunzman's new house is a beauty. His carnations are as fine as can be seen anywhere. Prosperity especially being hard to beat. The Lawson is at home here in fine shape, but his Enquirer tops them all in size, color and stem. Next season he will discard Crane, White Cloud and Norway, and instead grow Adonis, Enchantress, Gov. Wolcott and his red seedling, No. 9.

Nanz & Neuner's establishment, out at St. Mathews, is in apple pie order. Their American Beauties are in fine shape—deep in color and long stems.

Wm. Walker is cutting some very fine Golden Gate roses. He also has some very fine cyclamen in bloom.

Wm. Mann, the Lily King, is as jolly as ever. He knows his bank account will swell considerably during Xmas week.

Geo. Schulz, of Goss avenue, is very busy planting shrubs and trees. His plant department is in tip-top order. His Lilium Harrisii couldn't be better; scarcely any disease.

Mr. John Bohrman, of Jos. Coenen & Co., will be married soon. John is very popular in the Highlands, and the florists wish to congratulate him for winning such a handsome bride to be.

J. E. Marrett had the decorating for the Elks' memorial service.

T. B. Rudy has moved into his new residence, which is a peach, and he is the happiest man in town.

Mrs. Wood, mother of C. F. Wood, died in Virginia. Mr. Wood has the deep sympathy of his brother florists, who grieve with him for the loss of his mother.

Martin Reukauf, representing H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia, was a visitor.

H. Lichtefeld.

BASKETS OF CARNATIONS.

The accompanying engravings show four baskets of carnations exhibited at the recent Chicago show.

No. 1 is a canoe shaped basket of willow, filled with the light pink Enchantress on one side and with the darker pink Marquis on part of the other side, the two varieties being mixed on the handle. Asparagus was used for green and some carnation foliage and quite a number of buds. There is a bow of green ribbon on the lower front. This basket was the entry of John Mangel and was arranged by myself. It was awarded first prize.

No. 2 is a low round basket, very prettily filled with Morning Glory carnations, the foliage being asparagus and some pteris ferns. It was the entry of T. D. Mosconesotes and was awarded second prize.

No. 3 is an oblong basket of Lawson carnations, with their own foliage. It was massive and very striking. It was the entry of O. J. Friedman.

No. 4 is a round basket of the light pink Enchantress, with carnation buds and foliage interspersed and asparagus on the handle. This was the entry of A. Lange. L. P. Walz.

CARNATION NOTES—WEST.

We are just now having a spell of weather which is extremely hard on our carnation plants. We have not seen the sun for two hours steady for a good many days and the plants are showing the effects of the dark days. There is not that crisp appearance to the growth that you can see when the weather is bright and the plants are growing rapidly, but instead many of the varieties look soft and transparent and many stems are weak that really ought to hold up the blooms. Some varieties also are not keeping as well as they should and all these things can be remedied entirely only by a good spell of bright sunny weather, and I hope it comes before Xmas, else there will be an awful lot of poor rubbish on the market, waiting for many good people who will go to sleep thinking of the pretty flowers they will have for Xmas, only to wake up on Xmas morning to find that their pretty posies have also taken a nap and, alas, a nap from which they will never awake.

During this sort of dark weather, when it is just cold enough to have to keep up steam both day and night, the grower is very apt to neglect a very important thing in plant growing, and that is ventilating. To many growers a ventilator means nothing more nor less than a means of allowing the excessive heat to escape when the weather is warm and the sun is shining. They do not think of the fact that a plant breathes the air just the same as an animal does, and that it needs fresh air just as much. Keeping the temperature at a certain point is very important, but to keep the atmosphere pure and fresh is also very important. Raise the ventilators about an inch for two or three hours during the day, and if necessary turn on another pipe while they are raised and you will notice a difference in your plants in short order. The longer you can keep the ventilators up the better it will be for the plants, but a few hours each day will do wonders.

If the weather is cloudy during this week and next you should not attempt to force your plants very much, as it would be ruinous to them. They will get so soft that your crop for a long time will lose what quality it may have before you force them.

That you may have a large cut and a good sale for all you do cut is the wish of A. F. J. Baur.

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.

It is presumed you have decided which varieties to continue for another year, bearing in mind that the same amount of space, soil, fuel and practically a like amount of time and labor is required to grow inferior sorts as the later up-to-date ones.

We hear this year a great deal about stem and dry rots. These two things seem at present to be the greatest evils with which carnation growers have to contend. Whole benches of some varieties are swept off in a short time with no apparent remedy in sight. So then, it is evident that extreme care should be exercised in the choice of cuttings for next year's plants.

Some growers complain that Lawson is running down, and if this be the case there must be a cause. I believe it more than likely that in the desire to increase stock of this grand variety, careful selection has in many cases been lost sight of—in other words, any old thing that would root, passed. Over propagation and careless selection are two great factors in the weakening of any plant, be it a carnation or a rose. When the constitution is weakened the door is open for disease to enter.

It is unnecessary for me to dwell upon the results to be expected from poor plants; you would prefer to read about healthy ones. I have always agreed with our friend Dorner that the proper way to produce the ideal cutting is to grow plants for cuttings only. Of course, you would let them bloom early in the season for obvious reasons.

The average grower of carnations for cut blooms and he who propagates for his own use only, may not feel disposed to devote space and plants for this purpose, but rather than take cuttings from among the plants promiscuously, a much better plan would be to keep a sharp lookout for a number of the most healthy plants among your stock, mark them, and at the proper time cut them back. The cuttings from these stock plants if kept healthy and those taken from the stem of a perfect bloom will give you as good cuttings as can be had. It will not be necessary to sacrifice many plants in following this method as a good many cuttings can be obtained from a vigorous plant and when we consider the quality of the stock, instead of there being a sacrifice, we have made a gilt-edged investment. It is not good policy to hold a cent so close to the eye that a dollar can not be seen at arm's length.

Referring to my notes of September 18, you will notice under "cutting back" that in cutting a shoot before the bud is well set, the result is apt to be a clump of weak shoots on account of the stem being short-jointed. These are not ideal cuttings any more than a bloom that has not been disbudded is an ideal one, therefore in cutting back let the buds attain a diameter of at least three-eighths of an inch before putting them under the knife.

Hope to give you more on this subject next week.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

Propagation of roses for indoor culture by grafting being comparatively new in this country, is as yet very limited in its practice, and has been resorted to with the view of increasing the root action of those varieties which are naturally weak on their own roots or which have begun to deteriorate from continual forcing.

The first essential towards successful grafting is to have a properly constructed frame or pit in which to place the stock after the operation is performed. A frame suitable for this purpose can be built at a very small cost by boarding up a bench back and front in such a way as to conserve the heat and make it practically air tight, and which has sufficient piping to maintain a temperature of 75 or 80 degrees under any conditions, and having tight-fitting glass sashes to cover it with, as during the first ten days they must be kept very close and warm.

The stock for grafting on most generally used is the Manetti, an Italian rose of a very vigorous habit. These are imported in large quantities in a dormant condition and usually reach this country early in November. They are now also raised in this country. There are other stocks which many growers claim are "just as good."

The Manettis should be potted in 2½-inch pots early in December and placed on a light and airy bench in a temperature of 40 degrees, syringing them freely every bright day, and keeping the roots rather on the dry side. These are not fit to be operated upon until root action is well started and the eyes begin to swell.

The wood to be used as scions should be of similar size and quality as that used for cuttings and should be selected with the same discrimination and care. The stock should be cut back, leaving just sufficient wood to be easily worked on.

The mode of grafting used is largely a matter of taste, each grower having his own favorite style, the main object being to effect a neat union as expeditiously as possible. A fundamental principle which applies to every method of grafting is the necessity of forming a direct communication between the layers of inner bark in each of the parts to be united.

The style most generally in use is side grafting, either with or without the tongue, and is performed somewhat in the following manner: In order that the parts may be quite fresh the stock should not be cut until the graft is ready for insertion; the scion should be cut obliquely, the cut to be from ¾ to 1 inch in length and the cut on the stock to be of a similar length, shape, and if possible of the same width. A thin tongue can be cut on the scion with an upward cut and one of similar size on the stock with a downward cut in such a position that the tongue will fit in its place and hold the scion.

Care must be taken that the inner barks come in direct contact with each other when pressed together. It is necessary to have a keen edged knife so that the cuts are cleanly made, as this facilitates perfect fitting and union takes place much more readily. When the parts have been fitted as accurately as possible they should be bound together with raffia or some substitute that can be wrapped firmly without cutting into the bark. They should then be placed in the frame, the tops of the plants about six inches below the glass of the sash, and syringed lightly.

The frame should be kept closed for the first ten days and a steady temperature of 75 degrees maintained, opening the frame each morning for a few minutes to freshen the air and get rid of superfluous moisture in the frame. Shading will also have to be carefully attended to during this period. At the end of ten days they will be in a fit state to stand a little ventilation, and should only get about one inch, which can be gradually increased for the next fifteen days, when they can be taken out of the frame and placed on a bench in a temperature of 65 degrees, which can be gradually decreased until 58 degrees is reached. They ought to be shaded for a few days if the weather is bright. The whole operation occupies about three weeks' time.

ROSE TROUBLES.

I send you a plant of Bridesmaid Rose, which appears to be diseased. Please let me know through the Review what is the trouble. I have lost about 20 plants out of 275. They have died out in patches and the plant sent is from a corner that has once before been replanted. Several that were taken up and potted have recovered. W. H.

After a very careful and minute examination of the specimen sent I failed to find the slightest trace of any disease.

If the drainage is in any way imperfect one part of the bench may dry out more rapidly than others, especially in the corners where the heat is partly confined, and may become so dry as to injure the roots before it is detected. I may be mistaken but the specimen bears every evidence of having died simply from want of water.

It would be much easier to give correct answers to questions submitted if the inquirer when stating his trouble would mention the varieties he is having trouble with, and give a little information about attending conditions, such as quality of compost, temperature and general treatment.

ADIANTUM CUNEATUM.

There is no better nor more useful fern for florists' use than A. cuneatum, and there is a large and ever increasing demand for well grown fronds. To produce these in profitable quantities it is better to devote an entire house to this purpose, as it is nearly impossible to obtain the conditions suited to its proper culture in any other way.

As it requires abundant supplies of water when producing a crop of fronds, it is essential that the drainage of the bench should be as nearly perfect as possible. Between crops water has to be given sparingly to keep the soil from souring. The bench should be at least six inches deep and filled flush. A compost of two parts fibry loam and one part peaty soil, with another part composed of leaf mould, well rotted cow manure and sand in equal proportions thoroughly incorporated, suits it admirably.

As this fern is very impatient of heat at the roots the pipes should not be under the benches but removed as far from the bench as is convenient. To produce large perfect fronds in paying quantities a temperature of 62° to 65° is required during the night, rising to 72° or 76° during the day, maintaining a rather close and moist atmosphere. As the fronds approach their full size the temperature should be gradually reduced till it reaches 55° nights and 65° during the day; this will mature the fronds, prepare them for shipping purposes, and make them really useful to the retailer.

Draughts being very injurious to the young and tender fronds, it is better to have the benches as far removed from the ventilators as possible; in fact they seem to grow more luxuriantly if the benches are quite close to the floor, and particularly so in a house the floor of which is a foot or two below the level of the surrounding surface. To obtain a rich green color on the fronds and to keep the plants in a growing condition, it is necessary to shade during summer, beginning to shade lightly early in the spring and deepening the shade as the season advances up till September, when the shading should be gradually removed. They require very little shade during winter.

The largest and handsomest fronds are those produced by seedling plants. Plants from 2½-inch pots make excellent stock for benching and to insure a good cut during the winter these should be benched in June, watering liberally and keeping the atmosphere of the house very moist during summer. A quicker and less expensive way of securing stock is to break up the old plants into small pieces, pot into 2½-inch pots and give a good start previous to benching, but they seldom give the same satisfaction as young stock. To improve the quality of the fronds during summer a mulch of well decomposed cow manure broken up fine and spread between the rows one-half inch thick should be applied before the hot weather begins.

There are few plants which respond so readily to an application of liquid food as this does if applied at the right season. When the young fronds are 4 or 5 inches long and before they begin to unfurl is the right time to commence with liquid feeding, which must be discontinued as soon as the fronds are fully expanded.

This plant has also its insect enemies, snails and sow bugs being the most destructive. With a little care and trouble both of these can be easily destroyed. To catch the snails, traps in the form of cabbage leaves or old half rotten boards should be placed between the rows. With the first peep of daylight the snails will go to cover beneath these and they can then easily be collected and destroyed each morning. Sow bugs are readily destroyed by spreading finely sifted bran mixed with paris green along the edges of the benches. To keep greenfly in check a light mulch of chopped up tobacco stems will answer the purpose; even a very light smoking with tobacco will be sure to injure the young fronds.

A TRIP TO LAFAYETTE.

When we hear any one mention the name Lafayette we think of Dorner, and when we think of Dorner, we are thinking of carnations. Having promised myself and wife an unusual treat we took the morning train for Lafayette and arrived at Dorner's about 10 o'clock. The weather was bad, but if they know you are coming you need not worry about a way to get to their place, for their carriage is always in waiting.

Mr. Dorner, Sr., took us first of all for a look through the seedling houses, knowing well that they would be by far the most interesting part of the place. I have seen seedlings on many places and in large quantities, but never have I seen such system and orderliness as is found here. As you go through the houses and notice an extra fine one here and another there and notice their resemblance to some well known variety, perhaps in habit or bloom, Mr. Dorner will pull a small note-book from his pocket and in a jiffy he will tell you whether there was any blood of that variety introduced in many generations back. Keeping these records entails a lot of work, but it is certainly a nice thing to be able to refer to them, and where this work is carried on as extensively as it is here it surely pays, too.

Just to give you an idea of its extent, Mr. Dorner told me that last spring he planted in the field 8,000 seedling carnation plants. Out of these 2,200 were brought to flower again. From last year they have nearly 300 varieties in their second year and of those in their third and fourth there are several houses full. There are all colors and styles, and it would be hard to mention a color or combination of colors that you could not find here. Among the most promising is a white under number 123-1900, and in fact it has already shown its superiority by winning at Kansas City and Chicago this fall. For a money-making fancy white, I could not think of any way that it might be improved upon. There are many others, however, that are fine, too, and it would be impossible for me to give you even a small part of the good ones. Go and see them for yourself.

Two varieties are to be disseminated next spring, and both are worthy a trial by every grower. Sibyl is a very pleasing shade of bright pink of good size and on a strong stem. The growth of this variety is just about ideal, upright and extremely free. Mr. Dorner tells me that the variety is never off crop from early in the season until late in the spring. The other is named Penelope and is a white of good size and on good stems and very free. Mr. Dorner says this variety is of extra value because it is the earliest one he has ever seen and it will make a fine summer variety.

Yes, I was fortunate enough to see a few blooms of Fiancee, most of the blooming shoots having been taken off. That it is a grand carnation you already know, for did it not win in open competition with the best varieties in existence at Chicago? It is one of those things which you can only stand and admire and when you come away you wonder how such a variety was ever produced. It will take a large stock to supply the demand when this variety is put on the market.

One of the things I wanted to see was how their Alba were doing, and I was surprised at the size of their plants and the crop of buds and blooms and I am more convinced than ever that if propagated early this will be a profitable variety. Apollo and Stella also show up in fine form, as do many others of their varieties and others in the standard classes. I never saw a healthier and cleaner lot of plants than theirs and nearly every bench is full of buds and blooms.

There is an immense stock of plants for propagating only. These are planted on benches separate from the others and all the blooming shoots are kept picked off and all the young shoots are used for cuttings, in which this firm does an immense trade. Their propagating house is modern in every way, with brick bottom benches, etc.

This firm does not work only in carnations, however. There are houses full of all kinds of decorative and blooming plants for a retail trade, of which they have all they can handle. Miss Emily and Mr. Herman Dorner and several helpers were as busy as bees making up holly wreaths and it is a pleasure to sit and talk with them while they work; they will keep you from getting lonely.

After looking through the 60,000 square feet of glass in 21 houses we sat down to a bountiful dinner, gotten up as few people outside of our good German housekeepers can. You can see good management and good taste all through this establishment, from the front gate and the residence way down to the boiler pits. After dinner we were well entertained until it was time to go to the train, and when we came away we had only the very kindest recollections of our visit to this happy family of florists. A. F. J. MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Lilies.

I have been asked a question or two by a subscriber of the Review, and as they are seasonable, I will attempt to answer them under this head. Mr. Jones has mixed up his questions in rather an entangling manner, but with patience we decipher the following: "Can Harrisii lilies potted November 1, and which are now four inches high, in a temperature of 50 to 55 degrees, be got in flower by Easter?" We would say that, being 4 inches high now, they are all right for Easter, and 55 at night will do for another month or six weeks. After that they may need 65, or at least 60, for the remaining time.

Azaleas.

The next question is what time to start azaleas for Easter. Mr. J. says: "They are in 40 to 45 at night and have buds on now." Possibly the plants that have formed buds are the varieties we force for Christmas, and which without any forcing will develop their buds. If he has plants of Deutsche Perle or Simon Mardner showing color, put them into more heat and give them plenty of water, and they ought to sell during the month of January. Properly speaking, there is no starting of azaleas for Easter. On the contrary, with many of the best varieties we have often to retard their growth by keeping them in a very cool house. You can't do any better with the plants you want in flower for Easter than keep them in a house which is 40 at night. The natural increase of heat as the season advances will bring them along plenty fast enough.

Hydrangeas.

Next come hyprangeas, and Mr. Jones asks what time to start them for Easter. He has them dry and cool now. I hope not too dry. Cool is all right, and if they had a little frost to ripen up the wood, so much the better. Start the hydrangeas at once in a night temperature of 50 degrees, and by middle of February you can increase it to 55 or 60 degrees. I have seldom seen hydrangeas too early when forced for Easter. If they were lifted and potted from the field in October, they will want no more shifting, but if grown in pots and full of roots, they will want a shift, and use a good, heavy loam with a fourth of manure and well packed down.

Dahlias.

Another subscriber asks a question, not so seasonable for this latitude, for dahlia roots are now resting beneath a bench in a cool house; but in Tennessee where the inquiry comes from they may be only just digging them up. "Are the tubers that break off the stalks of dahlias in digging of any use?" Dahlia roots are often divided and started in the spring, and one tuber that had an eye or leaf bud would make a fine plant, but without this bud or eye it would be of no use. I don't think the dahlia tuber has eyes, as the potato has, except at the top or where it adheres to the stalk.

Begonia Lorraine.

Before you sell all your Gloire de Lorraine begonias put in a good lot of leaves for your next year's plants. If the sand is 65 degrees and your house 55 to 60 degrees that will do very well. A good, healthy, matured, strong leaf should be taken, and let all the leaf stalk remain on, sinking that in the sand, and the leaf just above the sand. They take some time to root, but make the finest plants, because they usually will get two or three growths from the very bottom, and this means a good, bushy plant.

Tulips and Narcissus.

It will be time now to bring in your first tulips and Von Sion narcissus. We used to think years ago that we must have them in flower at Christmas, but they are poor things when forced so early. Yellow Prince, La Reine, Vermilion Brilliant and Prosperine will fill the bill of colors. First of all see that the tulips are well rooted in the flats, and that is easy seen, for the roots should be showing through the bottom of the flats. If they are not well rooted you will only have a failure and will have wasted your bulbs. Forcing these bulbs which have active roots is entirely different from the treatment required for lily of the valley. The tulips want a strong top heat, 75 to 80 is not too much for the month of January, and some shade a foot or so above them. Cheese cloth on a light frame is as handy as anything. Without this shade you would get only 3 or 4-inch stems up to middle of February. After that date no shade is necessary. While the tulips and Von Sion narcissus want this strong heat for the early crops, they do not want their roots scorched. The heat of the boards over three or four hot water pipes is enough.

Large growers may have houses especially constructed for these operations, but you can get the conditions I have tried to describe by confining the heat of the pipes beneath a side bench, letting it come up only at a space between bench and wall, then your curtain of cheese cloth over the flats and hanging down to the bench on the path side will give you the top heat. Every day they should be freely watered, and when the strong forcing is going on spray them two or three times a day. When they are showing color the shade can be removed or the flats taken out of this hot box and be given light, but they still want a good warm house or they will just stand still. Simple as it is to force these beautiful flowers in March and April, they want considerable handling in mid-winter. Sixteen to twenty days produce a crop.

Lily of the Valley.

Cold storage valley is always depended upon up to New Years, because if you got flowers from the new pips you would not get the foliage. After New Years, or the roots put in now the newly transported crowns will do all right. Here is an entirely different process. When the beautiful little flower was first forced some thirty years ago there were all sorts of fads floated regarding the material in which to put the roots. Sand, pure or mixed, with chopped sphagnum, crushed coke, brick dust and cocoanut fiber all had their advocates. Experience and common sense have solved this question, and sand, just plain sand, either from the lake, river or bank, is all you need.

The sand should be kept at a temperature of 80 degrees, and this can be done by boxing in a bench, back, front and ends, and letting the heat of the pipes strike the slates which form the bottom of your bed, and while you are confining the heat beneath the bench you are keeping the atmosphere cool, and that is just what you want. The sand should be at least six inches deep, for although the roots make hardly any visible sign of growth, they should not be cut off to within three or four inches of the crown. Leave the roots as long as you can, a little trimming at the bottom is perhaps necessary, as it lets the roots absorb the moisture. The atmosphere of the house can be 55 or 60 degrees. Put the roots in the sand in straight rows and the rows three to four inches apart so you can poke the hose between them.

The all-important thing about forcing this dainty little flower is never to wet the bells after they are visible above the foliage, and to water the bed from overhead without doing this would be difficult to do, so on the level of the surface of bed or sand, the board that goes a foot higher should be hinged that you may let it drop when watering, and you can then water the sand without wetting a leaf. For the first ten days wetting the crowns and growth is of course no harm, but most injurious to the buds, especially when they are showing color.

We use two kinds of cover for the valley, the first ten days a thin or ½-inch board of any size to suit your bed—ours are 3x3½ feet—that will cover a batch of five or six hundred roots. Then until the buds are well open we use a covering of cheese cloth, and a day or two before cutting, no cover at all. Only if you are in the sunny South, or in Denver, where the sun always shines, don't let the sun shine brightly on them. Very little need of that caution here, for Old Sol hibernates for several months, as far as we know, and some winters we have to travel hundreds of miles south or west to get a glimpse of his genial rays.

GREENHOUSE CONSTRUCTION.

[Read before the St. Louis Florists' Club, Dec. 11, 1902, by J. W. Dunford, Jr.]

The subject of building and equipping greenhouse structures is a vital one to all of us as florists, and always interesting, especially to the grower. Knowing that all of you are practical men, I shall not attempt to enter into many details with which you are all quite familiar. For instance, you don't want me to tell you how deep to put your posts, how many coats of paint to use, nor how to make $250 build a $1,000 greenhouse. You know all these things, or ought to.

Many men make a great mistake in not selecting a suitable piece of ground to build upon. It is of the utmost importance that the ground not only be good, tillable and located close to a good market or means of transportation to same, but it must be right topographically. However, what may be considered right for one class of florists would not suit the other so well. For example, the wholesale grower, pure and simple, who is an expansionist from Expansionville, would want something different from the man who is grower and retailer combined. The first would say, "Let me hie to the woods and fields where land is cheap and nature reigns supreme, unhampered by some of the disagreeable things that have come with modern civilization." The latter would say, "I must go where there is a close retail market and be satisfied with what land I can afford to buy and depend on leased land for the balance of my needs."

I shall say little about this last man, for, while he has to put up with more or less smoke and other inconveniences, he probably has, in most cases, advantages over his country brother that balance these drawbacks, such as retail prices for his goods, city water, electric lights, etc. The man I am going to advise (will come to "Greenhouse Construction" pretty soon) is the man who is looking for property on which to build and build and build till he dies, and leaves the same song with the identical tune to be taken up by his posterity. To be serious and to the point, we will say select a piece of property with the right kind of soil and plenty of good water—this is the first consideration. Secondly, get as close as you can to a good market, on a railroad that runs more than one train a day, and as near a switch as you can. Personally I should prefer ground that is slightly rolling, with at least enough that is fairly level for all building purposes. For this latter purpose the ground could either slope eastward, southward, southeast, southwest, westward or be practically level. We do not consider this part of the subject as important as some people do.

An ideal piece of property would have a hill, the top of which could be utilized for his clear water and manure tanks. It would have a hollow, too, at the rear or north side of his greenhouses. This would save considerable scraping in excavating for his boiler shed, and if it was an accommodating hollow there would be a natural passage-way for wheeling out the ashes from the boiler shed, instead of the unnatural way in vogue in 75 per cent of our establishments of today—i. e., that of carrying them up in a box on a narrow, rickety flight of stairs, to be dustily dumped into our traditional carriage—the wheelbarrow.

Now for the subject for which I am paid. I am going to treat it in a general way. We will presume our man has his real estate and owns it, for I am altogether opposed to building on leased property. How to build—shall it be east and west or north and south? Shall we have connected or detached houses, large or small, iron or wood, and a variety of other things present themselves to our minds, and furthermore, perplex us, for in all these things doctors disagree. For the first proposition we say build according to the lay of your land. We can see no great advantage that one has over the other. For the second, we say, most emphatically, let them be connected and if all are to be used for the same purpose let there be no partitions between the houses except possibly one partition for every four or five houses. This is merely a good thing in times of great wind. It is true that detached houses, be they east and west or north and south, will give you more light; this is obvious. However, when you consider the question of fuel and taking care of the temperature in both kinds of houses you will all vote in favor of the connected house.

The size of house depends largely upon the depth of one's pocket-book and the purpose for which it is intended. On general principles, and for most purposes make the houses large, not unreasonably wide, as the width controls the height of ridge, and a very wide house means a high ridge, with a lot of dead space to keep heated. From 25 to 30 feet is a good width. We find that a 25-foot house gives us three center and two side benches that are about the right width. The length is immaterial, providing the house does not get too much fall, remembering, of course, the feelings of the poor men who have to wheel out the soil in the summer time. We hope to say more about this soil subject later. If your means will allow you to cover 2,500 square feet of ground with a greenhouse, make that house rather 25x100 feet than 12½x200 feet, unless you adopt the Dietsch patent house that our friend Ammann is going to tell us all about in the future.

Iron or wood.—There seems to be, as in many other things, two extremes: On the one hand we have the man who says: "Build as cheaply as you can. Make the 2 or 3 original coats of paint last the entire life time of a house, and when it has to come down, don't say 'Ain't it a shame,' but rather, 'this house has paid for itself and more, too. Besides this we have the glass left.'" On the other hand is a man, and he is generally a wealthy one, who feels justified, and he is, if he can afford it, in building a house almost entirely of iron, with 24x36 glass. We may say incidentally: "We are not it." Our belief is that a wooden house, with gutters, posts, purlins, purlin and ridge supports all of iron, is the proper thing for the average man. People who make a living and develop a longing to build greenhouses by the process of raising plants and cut flowers, can hardly afford to build costly iron houses. If they do succeed in building one to begin with they generally change their minds before the second is built.

Now, about the ventilating sash. This is a favorite subject of mine. We are not satisfied with the kind now in use, nor are we satisfied with any other kind we can think of. The nearest approach to our ideal in those of the present day, is the one that hinges at the bottom, because it is easy to raise. "But what about the rain?" you say. Yes, that's the rub. The matter of raising the sash of one or two houses in spring and fall is small, but when it comes to 15 or 20 it is hard work. How would a ventilating sash, not hinged, but balanced in the middle do, or one that would slide up, down or side wise? There is a fortune and everlasting gratitude due the man that invents a practical, easy to open ventilating sash.

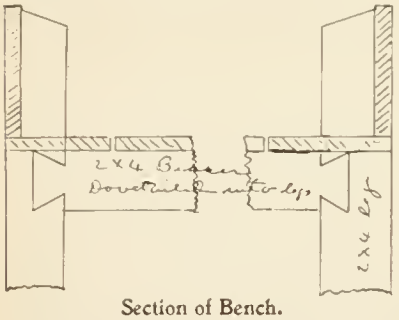
There are extremists in glazing. All will agree that the use of small glass is a back number. We do not think that very large glass is the best to use either —16 or 18x24 is large enough and we may say a popular greenhouse size. Very large glass is not advisable, chiefly because, strange as it may seem, it leaves a very large hole if a pane gets broken. We still cling to the old-fashioned way of bedding glass in putty and cannot see enough advantage in other methods to make us want to change.

It would seem unnecessary to tell you to get the best of everything in building—best seasoned cypress for frame work, best paint, putty and, in fact, everything I can think of except for the benches, and that brings me to another disputed part of our subject. Raised or solid beds? Our friend, Jablonsky, has this subject well in hand, and will tell you all about it. All we want to say is that cypress known as "pecky" is much cheaper than the clear, and answers the purpose just as well. For a raised bench we like our pattern very well. The bottom cross piece of 2x4 is dove-tailed into the legs, as shown in drawing. A bench built in this way is substantial and easy to construct.



Section of Bench.

I promised to say something more about wheeling out soil. We hope the day is not far distant when this barbarous custom in our hot summer weather will be a thing of the past, but who can suggest a remedy? Those who build in a large way could save handling the soil many times by building a passage way through the center crossing all the houses so that a team and wagon could drive through and load or empty as the case might be. This passage way could be filled with movable benches during the greater part of the year. However, this won't help us much, and the soil is still in the benches. We trust you will give this matter the thought it merits and hope these few remarks will be the means of benefitting at least a few of you.

NEW YORK.

The Coming Carnation Convention.

The Brooklyn Horticultural Association held its regular meeting at the Germania Club rooms, Brooklyn, last Wednesday evening. About twenty members were present. An informal discussion about carnations of the past, present and future, took place before the "quorum" arrived. This was of great interest. The general opinion of the growers as to the "holding" from year to year of the size of the carnations Bradt, Lawson and Prosperity was particularly commented upon. Great expectations as to the future of "Fiancee" were expressed, and the decadence of the oldest and greater favorite, the "Scott," was much regretted.

Mr. C. W. Ward, the president, was in the chair; full of enthusiasm as to the convention, and of good advice as to the means and ways of accomplishing success. Mr. Wallace, the secretary, read over the contract as to the banquet, and also the menu, which his knowledge of French enabled him to decipher glibly. I noticed several mouths watering during its progress. Mr. Langjahr, chairman of the entertainment committee, reported considerable progress, including an item for music, which will make the gathering a harmonious one. A trade exhibit of palms and decorative stock, which will be utilized in adding to the decorations of the hall, has been arranged for. It is possible, also, that opportunity may be found for an exhibit of flowering plants, as well. This exhibit will include Lager & Hurrell's display of orchids, and a goodly bank of the Nephrolepis Piersoni. Mr. W. Siebrecht has also indicated a desire to display his special valley and other bulb stock.

Mr. Plumb has been appointed general manager of the exhibition, and is believed to be "the right man in the right place." The two large rooms to be devoted to the exhibit are 85x42 and 65 x45 feet; 3,500 yards of decorative cloth, 150 evergreens and twenty cases of smilax, have already been arranged for. If any of the visiting conventionists are members of the "Elks" and will write immediately to Lodge No. 22, Brooklyn, they can secure excellent accommodations directly opposite the Germania Club building. At the club, also, meals can be procured at any hour, so that visitors may have every comfort while in the city. Good hotels are numerous in Brooklyn, and further particulars concerning these will follow later.

Mr. John V. Philips, retail florist, will have charge of the decoration of the banquet hall. Herr Kuenstler, of the Germania Club, is a banquet adept, and a most genial fellow who will make everybody feel at home. The Long Island florists are responding generously; and the suggestions for taking interest in the meeting, and the prophesy made by Mr. Hartshorne as to this being the banner convention, will undoubtedly be realized. The association will not be disappointed if the banquet finds 500 participants.

The Market.

The past week has been one of vicissitudes; almost zero weather at its beginning, snow and slush in the center, and a miniature blizzard at its close. Up the Hudson the temperature was below zero, and many of the shipments of violets were frozen. This week opens better. The weather is cool and seasonable, and stock of all kinds may be safely shipped without fear of frost.

The inevitable dullness of the holiday season is upon us. The Christmas shoppers are too busy purchasing Christmas presents and sending them, to give time to the æsthetic, and so it will be very nearly Christmas day before the lethargy departs. In the meantime the plantsmen are taking advantage of the milder weather to stock the retail stores with their blooming products, and gradually the retail display is assuming its old time holiday attractiveness, and it will undoubtedly be a great plant Christmas, the only trouble being the shortness of superior goods, the demand, not only here, but from out of town, having been enormous.

The record prices on roses and carnations of two weeks ago have not held as was anticipated. Our quotations indicate the average prices that are now received, although here and there in smaller quantities some extra fine or "special" stock, as we call it, may demand very nearly what the wholesaler may decide to ask for it. The queen of autumn has resigned her throne for the season. Orchids maintain their value, and the supply is not too great for the demand. Fancy carnations, and in fact all good stock, in this line, command fair prices, $2 per 100 being about the lowest asked for anything respectable.

The present week opened with a slight appreciation in prices of some things, which Mondays invariably show, to be followed doubtless by depression and waiting. Next Monday will undoubtedly see a change for the better. The wholesalers are quietly preparing for the anticipated rush and the indications are of no serious shortage for the holidays and no unreasonable prices.

Last week the New York market report was accidentally omitted and it contained some items that are needed to keep our record accurate. It told of an almost 50 per cent drop in violets and roses. Also an explanation of some of the quotations. Occasionally I have noted especially high prices for some things, away above the average. It is hardly necessary to say that such quotations occur with reference to so small a quantity of flowers that they could easily become misleading, and while they may, with perfect truth, be announced, the small selection of such "specials" place them apart from the general market entirely, while their sale depends on special holidays, or some entirely unexpected demand. The general market has its average—always below an accidental development.

Notes.

Mr. Ward's new book on the carnation will be published in January, and will be a most exhaustive work. Inquiries and orders are already numerous.

Papa Zeller, of Flatbush, is not as well as usual and much anxiety is felt as to his condition.

Some of the growers of this suburb during the extreme cold weather of last week decided to utilize the oil-heating system, and serious results are reported.

The coal question in the East is a very serious one; in New York and its suburbs especially, the short supply is mainly felt.

A scarcity of the Boston fern is in evidence and not half enough to supply the winter demand is to be found in this vicinity. Quite a large number of the Anna Foster fern in 6 and 7-inch pots are being used, the two making fine companions, one helping to sell the other.

Mr. Ward has a specialty this Christmas, Begonia Gloire de Lorraine baskets, at $5 each; and to demonstrate his ability as a salesman he came to town last week and sold his entire stock in two hours.

& Sons, is doing his town credit, and is winning the approbation of his employers. He will return well posted for effective decorative work during the World's Fair.

The building of Persian and Italian gardens seems to be the fad of the millionaires at present. The latest announcement is that John D. Rockefeller will have one worth $75,000 built in the spring on his country estate near Tarrytown.

Again the express companies have antagonized the rose growers by an addition of 50 per cent to their charges, and plans are on foot to circumvent this "robbery," for that is about what it is generally considered.

The American Institute's January meeting at the Berkeley Lyceum will be addressed by Professor Johnson on "Insect Pests and Their Control."

Messrs. Hageman & Meyer, the bulb dealers, have dissolved partnership.

An encouraging order from Germany for an extensive shipment of greenhouse materials has just reached the firm of Thos. W. Weathered's Sons.

Bradshaw & Hartman have just received a carload of holly and have opened a branch store at 44 W. Twenty-ninth street for the holidays.

Lewis Wood, of Fishkill, and David Rust, of Philadelphia, were in the city during the past week.

The New York Bowling Club has "suspended business" until after the holidays, when it will reorganize, with new alleys, and doubtless interesting additions to its membership, so that it may be able to give a good account of itself at the Milwaukee tournament.

Everyone seems pleased with the REVIEW's excellent Christmas number.

Things are booming with Alex. J. Guttman; one-third increased facilities, electric lights and excellent stock of Brides, Maids and fancy carnations.

J. A. Peterson, of Cincinnati, was a visitor on Monday, with his fine samples of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, which he displayed in J. H. Small & Son's windows.

The retail stores are beginning to dress in holiday garb, and next week we can tell you how the leaders manage to make their windows attractive and seasonable. Thorley already has his novelty—a handsome trunk for cut flowers—while his windows and ceilings are gay with bells and balls, and devices in red.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

BUFFALO.

We have had our usual December blizzard, and while we hear from a friend in Philadelphia that they had a sleet storm with a little snow on top, we had two days' howling snow storm, delaying trains and causing other inconveniences. It is gone and I hope will remain gone until over New Years.

There is every prospect of a gay season among those who have plenty of the ready to disburse. Several large entertainments and many smaller ones are booked. They will have these balls on Christmas day, or the day before or after. This is trying with the usual Christmas trade as well. The "Goodyear" wedding, an elaborate and beautiful affair, was finely done by W. J. Palmer & Son.

Flowers have about reached their Christmas price, and are none too plentiful, but we are trusting to our enterprising Mr. Kasting to fill all wants. During a visit to his large and varied establishment, consisting of office, sales counters, private office, warehouse, cellars, wire-working shops, etc., I was standing on a box in the rear of the sales place the other day when something struck me on the side of the head, and when I came to I found that two ten dollar bills wrapped around seven silver dollars had collided with my bump of veneration in its flight to the cashier. Not every commission florist has this up-to-date method of handling his cash sales. But, without joking, W. F. K. has an immense stock of holly, laurel, ground pine and all the other requisites of merry Xmas.

Several visitors have honored us of late, young Mr. Fancourt, in the interest of S. S. Pennock and his fine assortment of ribbons; Mr. Corneli, taking import orders for August Rhotert, and to our surprise and great pleasure, Messrs. Walker & McLean, of Youngstown, Ohio. I suppose they both needed a little let up before the battle, which soon will be on. They are men of a widely different type, but both lively, and an hour or two spent with them is a rest which refreshes you. Another surprise was the sudden appearance of that very bright little man, Mr. Hartshorne, of Joliet, Ill. A carnation talk with him is a treat, for he does not cram you full of his exact knowledge or positive assurance that all his methods are right and infallible, and yet he knows a lot about carnations, as his efforts at culture and the varieties he is sending out will testify.

We regret to know that our Louis H. Neubeck is confined to the house with sickness, and hope he will speedily get to business again. Louie's business without Louie would be like the oft-quoted play of Hamlet with the Royal Young Dane taken out.

Fire in a small way has visited one of our florists. Mr. S. A. Anderson, of Linwood avenue, is the victim. It started in the furnace room, and although the damage to the buildings is slight, and that I hope insured, it destroyed a lot of good flowering plants, among them a splendid lot of poinsettias of every useful size. They were an extra fine lot and will be a great loss to Mr. Anderson. Mr. A. has our sympathy, for at this time of year there is worry enough in filling orders without losing by fire what you felt certain you had.

I hope all my friends will have a prosperous as well as a joyous Christmas.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market was a little depressed towards the close of last week. Conditions improved on Saturday and have kept on improving during the early part of this week. Indications point to a continuance of favorable conditions this week with promise of an enormous increase in business next week. It is difficult to forecast Christmas prices, but the probability is that they will be about the same as last season, probably a little higher on some fancy stock and probably a little lower on poorer grades. There is reason to believe the supply will be large and much of it very fine.

To return to the present. Beauties are quite plentiful and sell well. The better grade of tea roses also sell well, but they can not be called plentiful as compared with the poorer grades. White carnations are in brisk demand, also red, which are less plentiful. Pink are used freely, but there are too many of them in proportion to the other colors. Violets are very scarce, so scarce that there seems risk of their disappearing altogether, but perhaps they are saving up for Christmas and will bloom like good fellows then. It is only fair to say, however, that there is much disease among the singles, causing the growers a lot of worry. Valley is in demand; more could be used. Paper whites sell slowly but Romans go better, thanks to the shortage in white carnations.

Plants.

The business in blooming plants is in a very active state. Robert Craig & Son have virtually sold all their fine cyclamens and Lorraines. William K. Harris has found an excellent demand for his berried plants. Several houses of holly and Aucuba Japonica are fast emptying. He also has a house of the dwarf Otaheite orange and a lot of azaleas in small sizes—Simon Mardner, Deutsche Perle and Vervæneana. H. H. Battles has a fine large house filled with Euphorbia Poinsettia in good shape. A great many other growers also have blooming plants ready for the holidays.

The foliage plant business is not entirely satisfactory. Probably more foliage plants were sold than last season. If that is true there were a great many more growers. Speaking generally, the large sizes are the best stock to-day. Some varieties are entirely too numerous for the market in the smaller sizes—say 4, 5 and 6-inch. Still the conditions are by no means discouraging: it is more than likely that another month will see an improvement.

Notes.

The Philadelphia Carnation Company is to be the name of a new business enterprise to be started with the new year. The active partners will be Harry Crawford and Horace T. Dumont. Two houses over 200 feet long and 26 feet wide will be built on the country place of Robert Crawford, Jr., at Secane. Carnations will be the specialty. It is planned to have everything ready for next fall. Harry Crawford is a son of Robert and is a young man of promise. He is now with the firm of Dumont & Co.

Leo Niessen is receiving very fine Beauties in quantity.

Eugene Bernheimer is handling lycopodium.

Mark Mills says that the new flower market has made a wonderful record in its first six weeks of business.

J. A. Peterson, of Cincinnati, was in town this week. He had some nice samples of Lorraine begonias.

Bingham Myers has succeeded C. H. Grigg at the helm of the new Colonial Flower Shop. Mr. Myers should prove a winner, having served his apprenticeship in that hustling school, the Century Flower Shop.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. have had a great run on their Christmas bells—all sold.

Julius Wolff, Jr., is sending in some fine valley to the flower market.

It is rumored that Charles P. Poryzees is planning something pleasant.

All kinds of Christmas greens are arriving, most of it in good condition. Holly is very fine.

The morality play of "Every Man" was given in Horticultural Hall last week.

The Florists' Club "Smoker" will be held Tuesday evening, January 6.

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society held its annual meeting last Tuesday evening.

A prosperous Christmas to you all.

Quiet lines for the florist last week. Guess the public was too busy watching the empty coal hod to stop to look at a flower!

Everything has been running a bit shy, too, except roses, so the situation averages up very well. Business is never good either a few days before or just after a holiday, so what can be expected when it is just after one holiday and just before another? But we will attract more or less attention soon.

The cold snap was a good stiff piece of work. Monday night was a record-breaker for sixteen years, and the coldest December night for nineteen years. A dozen or more frozen greenhouses, as many frozen boxes of cut flowers, the same number of frozen cars and a few frozen retail stores were among the results. As the few growers who came into the market that morning arrived and reported thermometer figures, from 6 to 20 below was given, the latter coming from Needham by way of Denys Zirngiebel. Later Mr. Elliott reported 18 below at his New Hampshire rose houses, which stood the test nobly. About all the coal in the state was burned and it has been lapped up ever since as fast as it arrives. All hands are shuddering to think what will happen in case of a prolonged zero season.

Another chill was added Monday morning by the announcement that J. M. Tuohy of Boston and East Boston had been crushed by the weight of $1,700 worth of creditors and gone to pieces. Assets are given at about $700. The Boston store is closed, the East Boston store sold out, and Mr. Tuohy is in the employ of Mr. T. F. Galvin.

The Park street church is practically sold for $1,250,000, about $150 per square foot for land occupied. No changes will be made for eighteen months, but the daily congregation that meets in the basement is working hard for new quarters.

I saw a flower box lined with patent carpet lining—the kind that consists of two sheets of paper and a filling of cotton batting, and believe it is a scheme worth trying. A little "supplementary reading matter" may be necessary, too.

J. S. MANTER.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

At time of writing business is rather quiet and the moderate supply is sufficient to meet most demands. By the time this reaches our readers Christmas prices will be practically in effect, and the principal matter of interest will be the supply for Christmas.

The weather has been very unfavorable and the chances for an adequate supply of first-class stock have grown dimmer. We have had an unpleasant alternation of cold and then sloppy weather and with practically no sunshine, and it is now too late to have any appreciable effect should the weather change for the better. A large percentage of the stock now received is soft and flabby, with weak stems and the usual saving up for a holiday will certainly badly aggravate the situation. Of course there is good stock to be had, but it is a small proportion of the stock received and the average in quality is much below what is usual at the season.

The chances are that of the receipts for Christmas trade not over one-third will be of first-class shipping grade, and those who must have good stock would be wise to get their orders in early. There will probably be plenty of soft undergrade stock and those who can use this grade can afford to wait until the market is loaded with it, as it probably will be at the last by the misguided individuals who every year hold back their consignments until too late to market them to advantage.

But roses and carnations will not be the whole thing. Encouraging reports come from the poinsettia growers. Kennicott Bros. Co., E. H. Hunt and McKellar & Winterson all have promises of heavy consignments of poinsettias, the last named firm saying they will have 3,500. And by the way "Flame flower" is a good popular name for these showy Christmas flowers. Mr. Scott would remind us that it is the colored bracts and not the flowers that are showy. But the head of bloom, with its surrounding bracts can be called a flower for commercial purposes.

Of other flowers, especially bulbous, there will undoubtedly be the usual Christmas supply. But on first-class roses and carnations only those who order early will stand a chance of being supplied.

Various Items.

The residence of Fritz Bahr, of Highland Park, was entirely destroyed by fire last Monday morning, the fire starting at 6 o'clock. It spread so rapidly that Mr. Bahr was obliged to drop his children one by one from a second story window into the arms of neighbors, and then to lower his wife and jump himself. The fire destroyed the house in less than half an hour. The greenhouses were not injured. Mr. Bahr carried insurance of $2,000 on the house and contents, but this will fall far short of covering the loss. There was an open grate fire in one of the rooms, and it is thought that the fire may have started from sparks from this, as when discovered the floor was all ablaze. Mr. Bahr's many friends will deeply sympathize with him in his misfortune.

McKellar & Winterson have received a very large supply of the popular red winter berry of very fine quality. Sprays of these make a fine addition to arrangements of plants and flowers, as well as associated with the usual Christmas greens.

Wietor Bros. are cutting some belated chyrsanthemums of very good quality. Their cut of Norway carnations is large and they consider it the best white carnation to date.

Kate Bassett Washburn, wife of C. L. Washburn and daughter of O. P. Bassett, died at Alma, Mich., last Friday, and was laid at rest in Hinsdale, Ill., on Sunday. Mr. Washburn and Mr. Bassett have the sincere sympathy of all in their bereavement.

The heater in the delivery wagon ot Wm. Kalous set fire to the wagon last week and some little damage was done before the fire could be extinguished. The stove became overheated and set fire to the paper wrappings of some plants.

Fire did serious damage to the greenhouses and residence of Wm. Beaudry Dec. 8. The loss is estimated at $4,500 and is fully covered by insurance.

It is reported in the daily press that the park employes are organizing a labor union of florists and gardeners.

The express companies have issued a circular to shippers announcing that the new rate of one and one-half merchandise rates on cut flowers went into effect Dec. 10. It is understood that the increase is due to the number of claims for damage on account of freezing and miscarriage, and that shippers who will waive right to claim damages may still secure the single merchandise rate. The minimum charge for single packages has also been raised and the shipper of small packages will be at a disadvantage.

Julius Schnapp has gone to Joliet to take charge of the cut flower department of Wilcox & Co.

Mr. E. J. Faucourt, representing Samuel S. Pennock, Philadelphia, was a visitor last week. He reports an excellent business in ribbons, of which this house makes a specialty.

On Wednesday we were favored with some sunshine and the weather was clear and cold. Should this weather continue stock may be stiffened up a little and the general average of quality be raised.

Edgar Sanders continues to improve and is now able to walk around his room a little each day, with the aid of a cane.

J. W. Hulsizer, of the Hulsizer Co., Des Moines, Ia., was a recent visitor.

Christmas Greens.

An unusually brisk demand for holly, wreathing and Xmas trees is shown in the numerous telegraphic and long distance phone orders from nearly every leading eastern and western city.

Pepper boughs from Southern California find ready sale at 50 cents per pound.

The Chicago daily press is paying particular attention this season to the Xmas decoration business, the Chicago Tribune having descriptive articles in its last two Sunday issues.

The increased demand for Christmas decorative material of all kinds is well demonstrated by the fact that one Chicago house (W. W. Barnard & Co.) paid nearly $5,000.00 for freight alone on holly, green, etc.

As predicted in a former issue, there will be an immense lot of bouquet green that is still held in the Wisconsin woods on speculation, absolutely go to waste, as time will not allow shipping it to the market. At a conservative estimate there are over 60,000 pounds in the hands of Wisconsin packers. This certainly is a wholesome lesson to them for another season.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

The sharp cold snap that was with us last week had a tendency to make stock scarce. Especially was this true of carnations, which were way short. Reds were most in demand and many orders had to be turned down. Whites were about equal to the demand, but there were hardly enough pink. There was scarcely any real fancy stock. Saturday saw everything in the way of carnations well cleared out, with the average price about one cent higher than the previous week.

Roses have been doing very nicely. There was a goodly supply of AI stock, which sold on sight and brought top market prices. The seconds and thirds did very well, especially in white and light pink, which were quickly taken up for funeral work. More American Beauties are to be had than heretofore and they are good property.

Violets are the most sought after flower at present, and are very scarce. There was a sharp advance in price, ordinary grades selling at from 50 cents to $1 per 100, and fancy reaching $2. There seems to be no chance for an immediate increase in the supply of this flower, and indications are that the price will mount again this week.

Harrisii lilies follow violets very closely, as to supply and demand.

As to supply prospects for Christmas, carnations in all grades will be scarce. Roses will in all probability be equal to the demand in all grades, except selects, which will be short. Several large growers are well in it with American Beauties and a large cut is anticipated. Violets will be scarce, as at present. There will be plenty of bulbous stock.

Notes.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Club was held Saturday and was very interesting. Considerable business was transacted. E. G. Gillett and Albert Sunderbruch were appointed to represent the club in the Fall Festival Association. The increase in express rates on cut flowers was taken up by the club and it was finally decided to confer with florists of other cities to see if anything can be done to have the new rate repealed. Leo Temming was elected a member.

Ed. Bissel, formerly with the Miami Floral Co., of Dayton, Ohio, is now with Huntsman & Co., Ft. Thomas, Ky.

John Evans dropped in for a few hours on his way home from Dayton, Ohio.

E. G. Gillett took a flying trip to New Castle and Richmond, Ind., and reports stock looking fine.

Julius Baer and Charlie Jones ran over to Richmond to have a look.

Mr. Weltz, of Wilmington, Ohio, and Mr. Fancourt, of Philadelphia, were recent visitors. C. J. Ohmer.

ST. LOUIS.

Trade Conditions.

Trade in cut flowers improved considerably the past week, owing to a large amount of funeral work, which with Christmas work in immortelles, cape flowers and wreathing, kept the retailers quite busy. The wholesale market was well supplied with all kinds of stock in cut flowers, and carnations and roses went begging. Of course A1 stock is always in demand, but everything that looked like seconds was left over.

It is hard to tell this early as to the supply of Christmas stock and prices on same. From the way stock is coming in just now one would think there will be plenty of everything, but, unfortunately for St. Louis, many of the shippers to this market do a retail business at home and naturally need most of the stock for their trade during the holidays. This keeps the wholesalers in hot water, being uncertain until the last moment as to what their shippers will send in.

The West End florists, who do a large trade in plants, seem well supplied this year. Among the best sellers is cyclamen, trade in which is immense at this time of the year. Primula grandiflora fimbriata, really beautiful in growth and flower, also has a good sale. Then comes that grand seller, Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, which with poinsettias in pans are now to Christmas what azaleas are to Easter—simply indispensable. All these ferns and palms make fine displays in the show houses of the West End florists and many orders are booked ahead, indicating a clean sweep in everything in this line by Christmas day.

Club Meeting.

The last meeting of the year of the St. Louis Florists' Club, held on last Thursday afternoon, was poorly attended, owing to the failure of Secretary Schray to send out notices. The meeting opened at 3 o'clock with fourteen members present and all the officers in their chairs. The final vote was taken on changing the hour of meeting and the result was that after this the meeting will open at 2 p. m. promptly. This gives our suburban and out-of-town members more time, as they often had to leave the meeting before it closed.

Henry Berning, C. A. Kuehn and Frank Ellis were appointed a committee to see the express companies in regard to lower charges on flowers from the consignors, which has almost doubled.

The club will give an entertainment for its members and their families in February. The committee in charge is composed of J. J. Beneke, F. M. Ellis and Frank Fillmore. The talent will be made up from the members and their families. Refreshments and dancing will be features.

Mayor Halstedt, of Belleville, left his busy office to attend the meeting and brought a few seedling carnations. A fine white (cross between McGowan and Flora Hill), and a large pink (cross between McGowan and Daybreak), which the judges, Messrs. Windler, Ellis and Fillmore, praised very much, especially the pink, pronouncing it an improvement over Daybreak.

Messrs. Jablonsky, Mohr and Halstedt were excused from reading their essays, all having been too busy to prepare same. President Dunford read his essay on "Greenhouse Construction," which proved very interesting and instructive.

Before closing the meeting Mayor Halstedt invited the club to hold its first meeting in the new year at the Commercial Club rooms in Belleville, which invitation was accepted with thanks. This meeting will take place January 8, at 2 o'clock, at the Commercial Club rooms in Belleville, Ill.

Henry Johann, of Collinsville, Ill., was in town visiting his son, who is now with Michel Plant and Bulb Co.

Fred Ammann and Henry Blixen, of Edwardsville, and E. W. Guy, Mayor Halstedt, Adolph Fehr and Henry Emundt, of Belleville, were in town the past week buying Christmas presents.

BALTIMORE.

In common with the rest of the country, this section has just passed through an epoch of severe and sudden wintry weather, all the more trying that up to its advent we had phenomenally high temperatures for the season. This, with the continued cloudy skies, snows, sleets and chilly rains, has retarded the production of cut flowers, while at the same time increasing the consumption of fuel—now, probably more than ever before, the factor of most vital consequence to most of our growers. Yet in the face of untoward conditions the general trade continues good, and the only thing to mar the prospect of a satisfactory holiday business is the impending scarcity of flowers of desirable grades.

Roses are improving in quantity and character, but local supplies are hardly equal to the demand. Carnations, in pinks and reds, are increasing in receipts, but whites continue short and indications are that they will be so until after Christmas. Violets are extremely scarce. Some of the largest producers of former years are out of the market. Mr. Merritt, who has about 400 sash, has not yet picked a flower, and during the summer lost the bulk of his plants. Some of his neighbors have the same experience.

The fuel situation does not improve. Coal supplies are short and the distribution very unsatisfactory. A curious, indeed inexplicable, feature is that some persons and firms seem to have succeeded in securing stocks of bituminous coal at very moderate rates, whilst others have been unable to procure it at even famine prices. A number of florists laid in their winter stock after the strike at figures which now would seem abnormally, almost absurdly, low, but some have lived only from hand to mouth in constant alarm, lest the temporary and uncertain supply should fail any day.

Some of the larger places in this vicinity are burning wood. At the extensive establishment of Messrs. Vincent, Jr., & Son, as we are informed, something like five cords a day are burned; and Isaac H. Moss at the larger of his two plants has been burning wood for the past week and has orders out for one hundred cords, though we believe he has four or five cars of coal on the rails somewhere between this city and the mines.

The advanced tariff on rates of the express companies became operative here on the 10th and 50 per cent is added to the cost of transportation. This tax is a heavy enough one to be borne, but it might be sustained with equanimity if there were any prospects that the service would be made 50 per cent more efficient. A story might be told in these columns of the derelictions and defaults of one of these companies which would be interesting as showing how far incompetence and neglect can go, without pointing a moral or adorning a tale.

Harry Ekas, for many years financial secretary of the Gardeners' Club, has resigned from that post. The club netted, as we are informed, a profit of about $100 on the recent chrysanthemum show.

The Florists' Exchange here has taken a new step in supplying the trade with holly, southern smilax and other natural requirements, as well as various manufactured articles. This will probably contribute to the convenience of patrons and add something to the earnings. B.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

From the disagreeable rainy and dark weather of the past week, we are now experiencing a spell of freezing temperature. With all this, business was good. The demand for fine stock was brisk and a general cleaning up on it occurred every day. The inferior grades of roses and carnations were slow sale and could be bought at your own price.

Roses are in fair supply, with quite a few specials and extras in Maids and Brides. These sold at a good figure; as high as $18 per 100 was obtained. White carnations are scarce. Beauties are plentiful enough and the quality fine.

Lilies have been rather scarce, just a few lots coming in now and then, but they are now arriving in better supply, Burki, Blind and Koenig sending the most of them. Mignonette, California violets and good Liberty roses are also scarce. Paper white narcissus are a glut and are offered in quantities at $15 and $20 per 1,000. Roman hyacinths and lily of the valley are good sellers. In green goods Sprengeri and bunched plumosus are scarce.

The increased express rate on cut flowers, which is now one and one-half merchandise rate, is causing a howl among the florists. During an interview held with Mr. Langhans of the Cut Flower Co., he said that the only remedy he could offer would be to be reasonable with the express companies, but insist on prompt delivery, giving them a sufficient time to make delivery, and if this is not done insist on a merchandise rate.

Mr. Burki speaks very encouragingly as to a fair supply of Maids, Brides, Beauties and carnations for Christmas from his Bakerstown place.

All the florists' shops are assuming a Christmas attire. Many pretty novelties are shown. Mrs. Williams has a very attractive window; also A. W. Smith and Randolph & McClements. The last mentioned firm is displaying some very fine poinsettias.

John Baldinger, of T. M. Ulam & Co., has returned from his eastern trip.

Martin Reukauf, representing H. Bayersdorfer & Co., was in town. Martin reports business good. He said that he just stopped off here to get a little smoke on his clothes, that's all. He got the smoke and a nice bunch of orders.

G. L. Huscroft, of Steubenville, Ohio, is confined at his home with typhoid fever.

Visitors: Arthur Langhans, of Wheeling, and George Schomer, of Connellsville, Pa.

One million bushels of coal (bituminous) left our harbor for the south last Saturday, and on Sunday ten millions more went out. Brother Florist, this is only a small shipment; it was all the river stage would allow, at this rise.

Seed Trade News.

PHILADELPHIA.—A. Emmerich, representing Vilmorin-Andrieux & Co., was a recent caller. There is an unusually early inquiry for early peas from both planters and dealers. Stocks of both are evidently low. Delivery estimates on Nebraska vine seed crops are being still lowered by the growers. Western onion sets have been offered in this market very freely of late. The stock of yellows seems to be large, while whites are short.

BRATTLEBORO, VT.—Carl S. Hopkins says: "It is not generally known that Vermont is quite a large seed producing state. Grand Isle county, surrounded on all sides by Lake Champlain, produces some of the finest peas and beans for the seed trade that are found anywhere, and from that section and all along the eastern shore of the lake thousands of bushels are annually shipped to the large wholesale dealers. All through the northern part barley and buckwheat are very extensively grown for seed purposes. Vermont grown barley has become the standard all through the east. From one end of the state to the other potatoes are grown for seed and are shipped in large and small quantities all over the east and south and are conceded by authorities to be the equal of those grown anywhere else in the world. Beet, sweet corn and some other seeds are grown in certain sections in a small way. There seems to be a hardiness and thrift imparted from the stony soil to each tree, plant and shrub that is transferred to the seeds themselves, and is very noticeable in a blight and drought resisting crop."

THE catalogue of the Iowa Seed Co., DesMoines, Ia., will this year be somewhat larger than ever before, owing to their devoting more space to ornamental plants. They have this year erected sixteen new greenhouses and are expecting to devote twelve acres exclusively to growing flower seeds, bulbs and plants on a new place purchased by Mr. Chas. N. Page last spring. This is in addition to stock grown on their farm.

LINCOLN, NEB.—The Griswold Seed Co. is moving its wholesale department into the new seed house. The building is equipped with up-to-date machinery for cleaning and milling grass, field and garden seeds, but especially seed corn. They are fortunate in being located just out of the "frost belt." They have orders booked already for more than 20,000 bushels of seed corn.

HARRISBURG, PA.—The Holmes Seed Co. expects to move into its fine new four-story building at 9 North Market Square January 1st, where it will have much more commodious quarters and greater facilities than heretofore. H. L. Holmes is vice-president and general manager of the company.

RICHMOND, VA.—The Diggs & Beadles Co. has been incorporated with a capital stock of $30,000, to deal in seeds, etc. Albert C. Diggs is president, John R. Beadles is vice president and A. Percy Diggs is secretary.

NOTWITHSTANDING the prospect of a medium to short crop of Chinese lilies, these bulbs will be sold on a closer margin next season than in former years, owing to very keen competition among the leading Chinese exporters.

ST. LOUIS.—The Plant Seed Co. have moved their retail department to 615 N. Fourth street. They still retain the two buildings at 814 and 816 N. Fourth street for their office and wholesale department.

THE COX Seed Co., San Francisco, has issued a finely printed pamphlet containing a series of views of crops on their seed farms, buildings, harvesting and cleaning seeds, etc.

INDIANAPOLIS.—The Union Trust Co. was appointed receiver of the Vail Seed Co., on the suit of Helen C. Vail against her brother, S. J. Vail.

PENDLETON, ORE.—The Pendleton Seed Separator Co. has been incorporated to manufacture and sell agricultural implements.

REPORTS from Bermuda growers predict lower prices on all sizes of Harrisii lily bulbs for next season.

SEVERAL large shipments to South Africa have recently been made by American seedsmen.

THE FIRST shipment of Japanese fern balls is due in Chicago about December 26th to 28th.

SEEDLING FERN.

Please tell us the name of the fern of which we send a specimen. It is a seedling that we found in a basket of Vanda suavis. FRANK BROS.

The seedling fern in question is one of the Stags Horn ferns, and so far as one can judge from so young a specimen, this is Platycerium alicorne majus. The fronds of this specimen have not yet attained their perfect form, and this makes a positive identification difficult, but from the fact that Vanda suavis and P. alcicorne majus are both natives of the same region, Polynesia, it is quite possible that specimens of each of these plants may have been growing upon branches of the same tree, or upon contiguous trees, and that the spores of the fern have been imported with the orchid. W. H. TAPLIN.

CARNATION EMPIRE STATE.

ED. FLORISTS' REVIEW: Empire State is disappointing us and we have decided not to disseminate it, as to do so would be injustice to the trade and bad policy for us. We shall not grow it again. L. E. MARQUISEE.

TROY, N. Y.—An overheated boiler caused a fire resulting in a loss of $800 at the greenhouses of John V. Robbins Dec. 9.

Last week, in the hurry of completion of the Christmas number, we got the price of Beauties and Edgelys too low, the specials being worth $40 to $60. Violets at $2.50 for specials were rather high, that price being secured for an odd bunch of 100 special selects if at all; $2.00 was top price this week Monday, with a warm spell promised and lower prices inevitable. Peter Crowe ferns are out of the market for the present.

WHAT YOU WILL NEED FOR CHRISTMAS.

OUR SPECIALTIES: AMERICAN BEAUTIES, CALIFORNIA VIOLETS, ROMANS, LILY OF THE VALLEY, PAPER WHITES, CARNATIONS, ALL KINDS OF ROSES AND SMILAX.

ST. PAUL.

Trade experienced a slight dullness immediately after Thanksgiving, but is again assuming holiday proportions. Six weeks of dark weather, with only an occasional day of sunshine, has kept the supply down and the quality below standard grade. Prices have consequently been high and sales curtailed somewhat on that account. The fuel question looks worse than ever now, about the only available coal at present being Illinois soft, and that is selling at higher figures than has heretofore been paid for the best Youghiogheny.

With coal at present prices, labor commanding better wages than ever before, glass, iron and all building material higher than in many years, we hear the query often propounded, "How can florists make a living without raising prices?" With a good demand for our products we are barely paying expenses. When the retrograde movement in business begins, as it surely will before many years, where will the florist be? If in "Prosperity" we only make ends meet what will be our fate in dull times? These are weighty questions, which every thinking man should consider before plunging into new ventures.

The Christmas supply looks dubious, though a few days of sunshine might bring forth an abundance of blooms. Carnations will be fairly plentiful, roses short, violets in good supply. The balance of the list will be plentiful enough, though a general shortage will be apparent.

Greens are much in evidence. Holly is of fair quality, well berried and desirable. Mistletoe is quite plentiful in this market and of good quality. The English product never gets this far, but that from Texas, which reaches us here is very fine. Green wreathing is plentiful at fair prices. The pickers and country merchants have quite a quantity still on hand, which will not find a market this season.

Flowers are not real estate, according to a recent decision in our district court. Christian Hansen objected to paying taxes on his greenhouse plants, assessed at $1,250, and defended the same in court. Judge Kelly decided that they were subject to taxation the same as growing nursery stock, which is specially mentioned by statute laws. Another case in which Mr. Hansen was interested has been decided in his favor by the supreme court of the state. This was the case in which he sued and obtained judgment against the gas company for $2,000, the supreme court affirming the judgment.

J. McHutchison, of McHutchison & Co., and Mr. Wade, representing Aug. Rhotert, of New York, were recent callers. E. M. Sherman, of Charles City, Iowa, was also a caller. X. Y. Z.

Joliet, Ill.—Chas. Siegk, who has been manager of the cut flower department of Wilcox & Co. for several years, has opened a retail store on his own account at 220 Jefferson street. His successor at Wilcox's is Julius Schnapp, of Chicago.

In the advertisement of Mr. John F. Rupp in our last issue the price on verbena should have been per 1,000 seeds instead of 100. It appears correctly in this week's issue.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

The weather is wild and blustering, with snow flurries not at all cheering to the man who longs for bright days to bring forth the flowers.

From indications flowers will be scarce for Christmas, and prices high. There will be a fine lot of Harrisii, also azaleas, poinsettias, Romans and valley in pots and pans, and any amount of palms and decorative stock. Great preparations are being made to handle holly and greens.

One store has about twenty-five girls making holly wreaths and green wreathing. They expect to sell an enormous quantity of holly and have turned their whole ground floor over to the handling of Xmas green goods.

Wm. Cunningham has bought two acres of land on the Cascade road, near Read's lake, not far from Crabb & Hunter's new plant. There is quite a colony of florists around the lake now; besides the two mentioned are Hopp & Lemke and Clarence Hills. The locality is sought after on account of its fine soil. Bruins-Slot & Sons also have the buying fever. They have bought four acres on Madison avenue, out near the old Kent county fair ground. They will build three small houses next spring, as a starter. G. F. C.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.

Monday and Tuesday nights (Dec. 8 and 9) were the coldest in years. Mercury registered 20 degrees below Monday night and Tuesday morning, with a high wind. Mercury was 6 degrees below zero at noon Tuesday and 15 degrees below Tuesday night. All florists had to stay by the fires for 48 hours and only soft coal to burn and hardly enough of that to be had; price is from $7.50 to $9 per ton. Prospects are poor for a large cut for Christmas, as we have had so much cloudy and stormy weather the past three weeks.

What holly that has arrived here is very poor, having been frozen very hard.

Florist Pratt has a fine batch of Harrisii lilies, but a little late for the holidays.

T. D. Brown, of Adams, was more fortunate than the florists here. He had a good lot of anthracite coal on hand, so got through the cold snap all right. He reports orders coming in for Christmas in good shape. A. H. Darling.

Detroit, Mich.—Three cases of plants from Holland were recently seized by customs officers on account of undervaluation, and when sold at auction realized only a small part of their value. A case of hydrangeas brought only $5 and two cases containing about 1,000 roses brought $4.

A very handsomely printed and illustrated special list of Christmas decorative material has been issued by W. W. Barnard & Co., Chicago.

EXPRESS RATES.

The action of the express companies in putting in force a rate of one and one-half times merchandise rate on cut flowers has brought forth many protests. It is generally understood that the action is due to losses sustained by the companies, due to claims for damages on account of flowers frozen in transit or miscarried. Some correspondents state that double merchandise rate is asked on cut flowers, but in Chicago the circulars of the companies give the rate as one and one-half. And it seems to be generally understood, though not so officially stated, that by waiving the right of claim for damages in case of loss, the old rate may be obtained. In this connection we print below copy of a letter addressed to the superintendent of the Pacific Express Co., St. Louis, by Mr. Geo. M. Kellogg, Pleasant Hill, Mo., under date of December 9:

Dear Sir: We wish to enter protest against the recent ruling of the express companies that no claims would be allowed for damage to flowers by freezing; for, while our loss up to this time has been very little, and we have never been able to collect that "little," we feel sure that the fact that your employees were to a certain degree liable to have to pay such losses, has been the chief reason of the smallness of ours in the past, and we are equally certain that for you to remove from the minds of your employees all fear of loss to themselves on account of damaged stock, will open the way for carelessness and negligence on their part, and result in heavy losses to the shipper and disappointment to his customers.

We have today received several protests from our customers, who have been informed of the new ruling, and they ask what assurance we can give them that their goods will receive proper attention en route. You will see that you have deprived them of what little protection they did have, and they are now looking to us for some assurance of relief, which we cannot give. Yours very truly,

GEORGE M. KELLOGG.

This is a matter that vitally affects the whole trade and united action should certainly be taken.

The December number of Meehan's Monthly is to be the last issued, which is to be regretted, as it has undoubtedly been of great value in stimulating a real love for flowers and nature.

Cle Elum, Wash.—John A. Balmer has bought out the interests of the others associated with him and will continue the business under his individual name, dropping the "Floral Co."

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Now look at him, what have I ever done to him? If I could only get my hands on him for a minute! These were the thoughts that passed through my mind when I read those rambling remarks by "the boy tramp," or what was it he called himself? Oh, yes, it was the "wayfarer," but anyway what's in a name? I am already beginning to pity him, for when I see him again, unless I forget by that time whether it was he or some one else that did the thing that caused us to lose our equanimity. It is strange, but it has so often happened when we were still a lad in short breeches, that after deciding in our own mind that the only way to appease our appetite for revenge for a certain wrong was to jump onto the offending party's collar the first time we met, and when we did meet that party we could not remember just what the wrong was or whether it was really he or someone else who perpetrated the trick. Not that our courage had ever failed us, not on your life, but we just could not remember exactly.

He said he caught me down on my knees, but believe me, good friends, I was only trying to coax some sweet peas to climb up the golden stairs and to incidentally drop a few shiners on their way up. They do take a lot of coaxing until you finally get them started up, you know. What he said about that fancy stock and those big crops, etc., is all taffy, for it is only just good commercial stock, such as every grower should be able to grow and some grow better. To what he said about those seedlings, of course I readily agree, because, don't you know, that every mother crow thinks that her baby crows are the blackest? We hope that some day soon you may be permitted to see for yourself how black they are.

What he said about those other fellows is true, every word of it, and I cannot understand why I was handled so roughly. He seemed in a very cheerful frame of mind when he was here. I suspect that was because he had left his Fiancee only a few hours before and his thoughts still dwelt on her great beauty and her bewitching smiles, etc. I noticed when he came in that he was breathing in short, nervous breaths and seemed very uneasy about something until he caught sight of that pink seedling, when he heaved a long sigh and said, "It does not come in the same class with Fiancee, does it?" When I assured him that it would not he could hardly contain himself for joy, because he said he had feared that he might have to spend another small fortune to save himself. BAUR.

KANSAS CITY.

Since writing my last notes we have been mourning the loss of our old friend, "Sol." For two weeks he has steadily refused to show his face with the exception of a few hours, and consequently stock is not going to be as plentiful for Christmas as we fondly anticipated. Even if we should have sunshine every day between now and the 25th the cut would not be more than 75 per cent of what it ought to be. A heavy snow has made it inconvenient for shoppers, and the tale is told when I say that there is nothing doing except small jobs. Of course orders are beginning to come in for Christmas, and everybody is getting busy on the holly wreath and roping, but the past week has been dull.

Newell had the decoration for the Elks' Memorial, December 7. This, like all the Elks' affairs, was very elaborate, and the decorations of palms and wild smilax were artistically arranged.

Today Mr. Rock and I drove out to the Rock-Heite Co.'s greenhouses. About two-thirds of the space is devoted to carnations and they are certainly covered with buds. They will have a big cut of nice blooms for Christmas. They have all the standard varieties and also many new ones, among them Prosperity, Higinbotham, Norway, Lawson, Estelle and Marie Louise. A seedling No. 8 (a cross between Maceo and Gomez) seems to be something good. The flowers I saw of it were 3½ inches in diameter, shaped very much like Mrs. Lawson, but lighter in color; the plant is a strong grower.

About as fine a lot of azaleas as you usually see will be in bloom for Christmas. Fine plants of bottle brush, genistas, araucarias and Boston ferns were in evidence. In fact, most everything is well done at this place. A small house of violets is at present off crop but full of buds. Take the trip, you western florists, when you come to town, it's worth the trouble. JOHN H. VESEY.

CHICOPEE FALLS, MASS.

The coal question is of vital interest here as elsewhere. My neighbor has been experimenting with soft coal, but found the draft not sufficient to carry off the smoke, and consequently more or less gas. As for myself, I have been buying a few hundred pounds of anthracite at a time, which I can get by hauling from Springfield, but the price is high—from $8 to $12 per ton—and can get but little at that.

Chicopee Falls and Chicopee Center, situated on the banks of the Chicopee River, one and one-half miles apart, are each three or four miles from Springfield, connected with that city by electric car lines. Chicopee Falls has one wholesale flower establishment and one retail plant grower, and Chicopee Center has two retail plant and flower growers; but there are no cut flower stores in either village, consequently Springfield gets a large part of the cut flower trade. E. R. M.

MONTREAL.

At the annual meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: President, G. Trussell; first vice-president, R. W. Whiting; second vice-president, C. Craig; secretary-treasurer, W. H. Horobin; assistant secretary, W. C. Hall; committee, W. Alcock, J. Kirkwood, J. Pidduck, J. Prescott, J. Lucke and E. Hayward.

It was decided to have the annual dinner on or about the fourth Monday of January.

AUBURN, N. Y.—Trade here is limited only by the supply. It is impossible to fully meet the demand. Thanksgiving trade was larger than ever before. A floral store recently started here has greatly stimulated demand by keeping flowers continually before the people.

LOOMIS, CAL.—The California Carnation Co. has bought out the Western Carnation Co., also all the carnations of the Knol Nursery, both of this city. This gives the California Carnation Co. over half a million rooted cuttings to sell this winter.

PLEASANT HILL, MO.—Mr. Geo. M. Kellogg has contracted for the services of a "new florist," who arrived at the home of A. Larsen Sunday, December 7th. Mother and baby are doing well.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.—D. B. Edwards has incorporated his business under the title Edwards Floral Hall Co. He remains in charge as manager.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Gustave Gagne has removed to his new quarters at 2337-47 Lombard street.

WHITE HALL, ILL.—John T. Cherry has removed to Athens, Ill.

The weather during the last week has been extremely cold, and the growers who are able to keep heat up do it at the expense of a great amount of coal, which has been quite a problem with some. Especially is this kind of weather bad for those whose crop is somewhat behind, and we hear now some talk of the fine cut that some of the growers will have for about the 15th of January.

We have not yet heard of any of the growers losing any stock by freezing, which, unfortunately, cannot be said about some of the dealers, as Mr. J. S. Simmons, of Yonge street had the misfortune to have his whole stock of palms and other plants in his store frozen on Friday night through the fan-light blowing open. This is a big loss, as he had a quantity of fresh stock in for his Xmas trade. Mr. D. J. Sinclair also lost a number of fine plants he had for window decoration.

Mr. E. Grainger has opened a city branch in the Yonge street arcade. Mr. Grainger has been in the seed and flower business for a number of years in partnership with his brother at Deer Park. Some months ago the partnership was dissolved and now Mr. Grainger has opened the new city branch in conjunction with his own greenhouse at Deer Park. We wish him every success.

We are informed that Mr. Jas. Goodyear, of Exhibition Park, is about to leave the city. We are sorry to hear this, as Mr. Goodyear has always taken an active part in the Gardners' and Florists' Association, and other associations in connection with floriculture in the city. He has been orchid grower for Exhibition Park for a number of years, and is considered to be one of the best authorities on orchids in the city.

Your correspondent asked a grower the other day how he was off for coal. "Well," he said, "it is this way. I can buy it, but have no certainty that the railway company will deliver it: for example, I bought a carload of coal at Detroit and when it got as far as Stratford the railway company 'confiscated' it." It would look very much as if we are in a time of war, with coal as contraband that can be commandeered at will.

Xmas trade looks very promising from present appearances, but then it is too early to do anything else but guess at it. D. J.

Atlanta, Ga.—A petition for a charter for the Rose Hill Floral Co., this city, has been filed. The petitioners for the charter are J. P. Carr, H. T. Henderson and G. C. Bryant. The company is to be capitalized at $2,500 and the privilege is asked to increase this amount to not more than $10,000.

Xenia, O.—Will J. Lampert, son of J. J. Lampert, the florist, was married Dec. 10, the bride being Miss Josephine Owen. They will reside in Dayton.

Plants for the Holidays.

You make a mistake if you buy Araucaria Excelsa from some other firm, as it is impossible for any other firm to give you such value for the money as we can. Why? Because we make a specialty of them; filling our houses in early April with the best to be found in Europe, raised from top cuttings only. All must be sold before Christmas to make room for Easter plants.

5½ to 6-in. pot, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24 up to 26 inches high, 3-4-5 tiers, 70c, 75c, 80c, 90c and $1.00. Our specimens are perfect beauties, as broad as long; 6-in. pots, 5-6 tiers, very large, and only $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 to $1.75 each.

Kentias Belmoreana and Forsterlana, 3 to 4 years old, first-class stock only, from 25 to 36 inches high, 6-in. pots, only 75c to $1.00.

Cash with order please. To save express mention if pots to be taken off.

Governor Lowndes.

Color—Pure white. Size—3 to 3½ inches in diameter. Calyx—Spreading at the top, making it practically non-bursting. Form—The lower or guard petals stand out straight, retaining the full size of bloom. Petals slightly serrated and beautifully arranged, forming a full rounded center. Odor—Is very sweet and particularly pleasing. Stem—19 inches to 2½ feet during the season, and always strong enough to carry the large flower erect. Habit—Strong and vigorous, thrives well and grows rapidly. Transplants readily, comes into bloom early, and is not a cropper. It will stand closer planting than most varieties. Productiveness—Extremely free flowering. More productive than any other large white. A profitable and high grade commercial variety.

Price—$2.50 per doz.; $12 per 100; $100 per 1000; 50 at 100 rate; 500 at 1000 rate.

ALBANY, N. Y.

All the growers here are in good shape this season.

L. Menand has two houses of carnations, two of roses, and one of palms, all in good shape. A bench of peppers and another of Harrisii lilies are exceptionally good.

John Dingwall has one house of roses and two of carnations that are very promising. He will force fifty to seventy-five thousand tulips.

At Watervliet, Isaac Gillett has four houses of carnations in fine condition, especially considering that they were planted late. Late planting was tried this year on account of stem-rot in former years, which it is thought may be due to early planting.

William Hannell is a beginner, starting last spring, just outside of Watervliet, with one house of roses and one of carnations, each 23x150. Both are looking well.

Carpenter, of Cohoes, has two houses of carnations, one of roses, one of violets and one of smilax and mixed stuff, all in good shape.

Mr. Zimmerman's houses are mostly in carnations and they are fine, especially Lawson, Prosperity and Marquis. He has recently added a new house.

Lambrook & Sons, of Watervliet, have one house of palms, one of roses and one of violets. They are not growing any carnations, preferring to buy what they need for their store in Troy.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

WEDDING DECORATION.

We present in this issue two views of a wedding decoration at Delmonico's, New York, arranged by Wadley & Smythe, the florists, of that city.

Both the large and small ballrooms were decorated, the walls, windows and ceiling being covered with wild smilax interspersed with thousands of electric lights. In one hall the floor was covered with green baize, with gravel walks, to carry out the idea of an immense garden, with rustic fences, pagodas and avenues of blooming rose trees. The pagoda with the thatched roof and many doves suspended naturally above it is shown in one of the pictures.

In the large ballroom, seen in the other picture, the great white columns reaching to the roof were entwined with laurel roping and smilax and lit up by small electric bulbs.

The decoration as a whole was exceedingly handsome and artistic and drew forth much favorable comment. We believe the two excellent views we are able to present will be of much interest to our readers.

Wedding Decoration by Wadley & Smythe, New York.

THRIPS ON ORCHIDS.

A subscriber, who greatly appreciates the columns of the Review, asks the best remedy for thrips in an orchid house, and he adds that he has used for this purpose, but with poor results, the various liquid preparations of tobacco, as well as tobacco dust. He says the nicotine burns the young growths and does not kill the thrips, as he thinks that they "hide in the green moss that covers the surface of the pots."

In my experience with orchids, which has been mostly with cattleyas, cypripediums and a few other familiar genera, I have not been troubled with thrips, but for the benefit of Subscriber I have consulted a grower of orchids of life long experience, both here and in Europe, and he says thrips are sometimes very troublesome to cattleyas, dendrobiums and some others. Fumigating, spraying or dusting is of little use, and a strong solution of any of the nicotine mixtures might be very injurious to the young growths. Dissolve some castile soap in warm water—don't use very much soap—and to a gallon of this add one-eighth of a pound of the "Rose Leaf Extract of Tobacco" or one tablespoonful of "Nikoteen," and with a sponge wash every part of the plant down to the moss or peat.

It is very improbable that the thrips ever infest the sphagnum or peat, but if you were positive they did, that could be removed and renewed while the sponging was done. If a proper degree of moisture be kept in the house, you will have no thrips. It is a neglect of syringing and watering in the summer time or again when you have to fire hard, that brings these most troublesome pests into your house.

William Scott.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

The kind of weather we have been experiencing recently has begun to show its effect upon all varieties of roses, and great care must be taken to maintain vigor and good health during the next two months.

Crops are so tardy and prices so tempting that many will be induced to resort to forcing tactics to forward the cut. As a rule plants are in no condition this year to bear any extra strain, and the growers who resort to forcing are running a big risk of losing or materially injuring the succeeding crops. Experts have their own favorite formulas for hastening a crop, but with all their knowledge and care there is still an element of danger which it is better to avoid if possible.

Those conservative growers who exercise patience and make the health of the plants their first consideration are more likely to have the most satisfaction at the end of the season. Owing to lack of sunshine the wood and foliage are of a much softer character than usual and if the temperature is increased the trouble will be augmented, and the wood for succeeding crops will be deficient in stamina, and will be disappointing for propagating purposes.

Ventilation at this time should be carefully attended to night and day, missing no opportunity to give all that the weather will permit. Fuel being so scarce it seems like mockery to advise free ventilation while firing has to be kept up, but this is absolutely necessary to the health of the stock, and those who won't and those who can't are sure to feel the consequences sooner or later.

It must also be borne in mind that the vitality of the plants is now at its lowest and that they cannot use either a large supply of food or water, so a careful examination should be made daily and the supply regulated according to their wants. Liquid feeding once a week during bright weather will strengthen the wood and help to develop the cut.

Careful watching to ascertain the wants of the plants, and supply these at the right season is one of the principal duties of the grower and the ability which he displays in this respect will be reflected in the quantity and quality of the cut later on. Ribes.

ROSE TROUBLES.

We send some sample cuttings from our roses. The plants are in solid bed, heavy loam soil and with a night temperature of about 54 degrees. Most of the plants have done nicely. Occasionally a plant here and there through the bed will start to turn brown on the cane, the bud will blast, the leaves drop or turn light colored and the plant stop growing or make only a very weakly growth. Can you tell me what the trouble is, its cause and remedy?

H.

These samples bear every indication of having been grown in a very low temperature and in a very stagnant atmosphere. They also show signs of the roots having dipped into some cold and uncongenial soil.

To remedy this, begin by raising the temperature to 56 degrees nights, with a small crack of ventilation on if possible, and allow them to run up to 72 degrees during bright sunshine. To ventilate properly the ventilators should be raised a very little at a time as the day warms, and lowered with same care in the afternoon, and this should be persisted in even at the expense of a little extra fuel.

Care in watering and syringing, so that the foliage may be dry before sundown, making no attempt at feeding till the trouble is over, will, or should, soon effect a cure. Ribes.

CARRIED OVER ROSES.

What success will one have in keeping tea roses over the second year (plants grown on their own roots) and how do results compare with those from one-year roses? Inquirer.

If tea roses are properly handled they can be run over a second year with success. Young healthy stock, however, is preferable and invariably gives better results. Ribes.

CARNATIONS.

I am doing a little with some of the newer varieties of carnations and have the following to say in regard to them: In whites, Norway easily takes the lead and will next year largely supplant White Cloud. Mary Wood will have to go entirely. Lorna is making fine flowers, but too far between flowers. Prosperity will be planted in quantity. Mrs. Potter Palmer has to do a lot of improving. The plants were a hard looking lot when planted and have hardly had a fair show. It may do better under different circumstances.

Lawson is still all that has been said for it. But the carnation that has paid the best to date is Ethel Crocker. This variety has bloomed continuously since it was planted, Aug. 20. The flowers were as large as Lawson and had the advantage of a long stem. Morning Glory is a free and constant bloomer with flowers of good commercial size—one of the best for a man who retails his own stock. Triumph, although one of the oldest varieties, still does splendidly for me, and it will take something pretty fine to displace it. Joost has seen its last planting. I shall try some of this year's introductions, including Enchantress and Adonis.

John H. Vesey.

Kansas City, Mo.

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.

After Christmas.

The Christmas crop has gone into history and it is hoped the book is a large volume profusely illustrated with cuts by Uncle Sam done in green. Your plants having undergone a severe pruning as it were, attention must now be given to their immediate needs.

Extreme caution should be taken as regards watering. A plant which has had an unsual number of blooms cut from it in one day must of necessity be so treated as to restore the proper balance between its foliage and roots. This can be done by regulating the water supply, keeping the plants a trifle on the dry side, when in due time they will again be in good growing condition.

It is impossible to lay down any positive rule to follow, the weather having much to do with the procedure. Should we have a week of dark, stormy weather, very little water will be needed except perhaps in spots directly affected by the heating pipes. In case of bright days give the plants a gentle shower or delicate syringing all over them, using but a small amount of water; do this early in the morning, following about 2 p. m. with a liberal dose of Grape Dust. In any case give plenty of ventilation, even if you do so at the expense of more fuel. If you have or have not been feeding with liquid manure, do not by any means apply any until the plants are rested from the holiday strain.

Cuttings.

The above was written as timely words before fulfilling my promise of last week to give you more on this subject, so much depends on obtaining strong cuttings.

The next two months will see the larger part of your next year's stock under way, so make plans to provide a suitable place for it when rooted and established.

We trim our cuttings at both ends, taking off the least bit at the base with a very sharp knife, leaving a clean cut from which come an abundance of roots. Trimming at the top allows more cuttings to be put in a given space, lets more air among them and contrary to some opinions it is better for the cutting; there is less tissue to be kept up, less wilting and consequently a larger per cent root.

What little sap there is in a cutting amounts to very little, as will be seen if one is left to lay around a short time. That contained in the part trimmed off amounts to less than nothing or in other words is a burden and detriment when left on.

Getting them into the sand as soon as possible after taking from the plant is the secret of successful rooting; at least it is one of the most important points. Before inserting in the sand give them a bath in a weak solution ammonia-copper carbonate.

Geo. S. Osborn.

SLEEPY CARNATIONS.

What is the cause of my Flora Hill carnations being so sleepy? They have a night temperature of 46 to 48 and in daytime 60 and over, with plenty of air. Benches are just a little on the dry side but give plenty of water on bright days. Have a good mulch of cow manure on them. The flowers don't open right and look withered when about three-quarters open. Please tell me how to use nitrate of soda. O. H. R.

You are keeping your Flora Hill too cool, and I am inclined to think that is at the bottom of the trouble. Flora Hill to do well in midwinter requires a temperature of 54 to 56 and not too much feeding. If you will just consider that it is a splendid summer variety and that it is always easy to grow in the fall and again in the spring you can readily see that it likes a warm temperature. A little observation along this line will help you a great deal in determining the wants of each variety.

Use one pound of nitrate of soda to 50 gallons of water, but until you are quite expert in growing carnations I would advise you to use chemicals sparingly. Much damage is done with them in the hands of inexperienced growers.

A. F. J. Baur.

RUSTY CARNATIONS.

I send some leaves from my carnations that are affected by some disease. Please tell me what it is and the remedy.

J. B. W.

The leaves you sent showed plainly that your plants are affected with the disease called Septoria dianthi, commonly called "rust." We do not dread this disease as we did five years ago, but of course it is not a desirable thing to have on the place and we try to prevent it as much as possible. Some varieties are just about proof against it while on other varieties it will appear to some extent nearly every year.

It has been proven that the spores of this disease will remain dormant as long as they are kept dry and when you know that much you need not be told much more. Stop syringing for a while unless you see red spider appear on your plants and dust the plants with lime or sulphur and lime or Fostite or Grape-dust. Any of these will help to dry up the spores and render them inactive. When you water turn the water on so there is no force to the stream and run the hose between the plants close to the soil, thus keeping the plants dry overhead.

NOTES OF A WAYFARER.

On questioning our timepiece, we found time to go to the other end of Indianapolis and see our old friend, H. W. Rieman. We found him in the boiler hole, through building, repairing, etc. Henry has had a lively time of it, but was just putting on the finishing touches when we appeared on the scene. H. W. Rieman chrysanthemum is still the best mum for Thanksgiving, here as elsewhere. Mr. Rieman has two other good seedlings of his own in quantity —Adelia, white, and Miranda, pink, both fine commercial varieties. The white one we thought perfection itself as we saw it at the Kansas City show. We would call it an improved Ivory and very much so; looks an easier doer. They arrived too late to compete at Kansas City. We shall await with interest to see what a showing these will make next year when the facilities for growing them will be improved.

His carnations were in nice shape. The pink McGowan seedling, a cross between Scott and McGowan, is a good thing for a retail place, a pleasing color and a free bloomer. As short as was our stay, we still have some interesting memories of that bench of seedling carnations.

We arrived at E. T. Grave's establishment at Richmond just as the shades of night were falling and before we were half through the houses the shades had fallen "kerplunk." The lantern inspection which followed was more of a success than we would have anticipated. President McKinley, the new carnation now being offered, was an agreeable surprise to us. We don't believe we will want to grow many Lawson (in which class it comes) when we get this sterling cerise color, with longer stems and no splits; it also seems quite free. We think Mr. Grave should feel proud to have beaten five vases of 100 Lawson each, at Chicago, even if he did have to take second to the sixth one, considering that he has not an extra large quantity to pick from. We noticed here a good commercial scarlet, which will be ready a year from now, Estelle shade, extremely free and good stems. Crane and America are grown for red, the former variety the better of the two. An extra fine batch of Mrs. Potter Palmer looked as free as anything on the place, long stems and large flowers. The color of this variety does not seem to give entire satisfaction early in the fall, but is now rounding into shape, and will without doubt ere long be all that was claimed for it.

We found John Evans at home, as becomes all men of his station of life, taking care of the babies, getting more gray and fatherly looking every day. If you visit Richmond, don't fail to call on John, for Evans will Challenge you to go anywhere with him, and he has a rig to take you in at that. We had him in hand at the E. G. Hill Company's place and back. John knows little about flowers and little about horseflesh, but what he don't know about ventilating machines isn't worth knowing. We missed him at the fall shows this year, but he says that they are so swamped with business that he could not possibly get away from Richmond.

Any one never having visited Hill's would be greatly surprised at the large quantities of mums, roses and geranium plants by the hundreds of thousands to be shipped to all parts of the globe. The house of seedling roses is particularly interesting. Some of them will push their way to the front in spite of the best present day standard varieties. Franz Deegen, the new yellow, is a gem. It was throwing up strong shoots and new breaks in abundance and could not help but win the admiration of the most skeptical rosarians. Carnations here suffered severely last summer; they are nearly all late and Mr. Hill regrets now that he ever planted them on that low bog land, which everybody thought would do such wonders; it shows that the best of us are not always good judges of soil and locations to plant in.

The varieties showing the most flowers in order named were their new white, Innocence; Higinbotham, which they had a good word for; Nelson, Gaiety, Wolcott. Adonis is coming on in great shape and possibly a shell from the Indiana may strike the Brooklyn amidships yet and upset all calculations. Mr. Lemon had already started on his first batch of Adonis cuttings, which are of the quality to win further orders.

Many other varieties are grown, but owing to their lateness could not with justice to themselves be criticized. At the time of our departure we noticed Mr. Hill very busy booking the orders of our crowd for Franz Deegen rose and new chrysanthemums.

NEW GREENHOUSE AT BRIARCLIFF, SCARBOROUGH, N. Y.

We present herewith exterior and interior views of the new greenhouse at "Briarcliff," Scarborough, N. Y., erected by the Pierson-Sefton Co., Jersey City, N. J., and which has received much favorable comment.

The house runs east and west, is 55 by 300 feet outside measure, the inside width between walls being 54 feet 4½ inches. The height of ridge is 22½ feet above grade and the ridge is 22 feet 8 inches to the south from the north wall. The grade slopes to the south 2 inches in the width of the house, the grade being level lengthwise. The height of the sides is 6 feet above grade.

The house has eight beds, each 4 feet 7 inches wide and 2 feet 4 inches high, and there are eight walks, 1 foot 11 inches wide and one walk 2 feet 2 inches wide. The roof is supported by four lines of columns, one under ridge, two under front slope and one under rear slope. The ridge and rear columns have lateral braces extending to purlins and the columns are connected across the house by tie rods. The north slope of the roof has three lines of angle iron purlins and the south slope four lines. There are two lines of vents at the ridge, each 3 feet wide, and there is a line of panel vents at the south side 20 inches wide.

The house is heated by steam through galvanized 1¼-inch wrought iron pipes secured to the sides of the beds and branching from the mains which run in a trench across the center of the house. All the iron used in the house, including bolts and screws, is galvanized after being drilled, punched, bent and fitted, so as to avoid any ungalvanized surfaces.

The foundation consists of iron posts set 4 feet apart in solid concrete piers, a heavy angle iron base plate being bolted to the posts, and to this plate steel U bars 3-16x1¼x1¼-inch are bolted. The U bars extend from plate to plate, the eave line being bent to 16-inch radius and the ridge connection being made by a cast iron bracket. The U bars are bolted to the angle iron roof purlins, which are placed from 6 to 10 feet apart. The sides of the house at the rear and ends, extending from 6 inches below grade to about 2 feet 4 inches above grade, also the sides of the house at the front from 6 inches below grade to about 6 inches above grade, are of concrete blocks fastened to the iron frame, the blocks being capped with iron sills. The walks and beds are of concrete.

The house is glazed with 16x24 glass laid the 24-inch way between bars, the glass at the eaves being bent to fit the curve of the bars. The glass is bedded in putty and secured to cypress core bars with zinc shoe nails in the usual way. The cypress core bar is secured to the U bar with screws. There is no wood exposed on the inside of the house, except the ridge and ventilators, and there is no iron exposed on the outside except the sills. All the iron and steel being galvanized no painting is required on the inside, the outside being painted in the usual manner. The general combination of the various details employed secures a house remarkably light, strong and durable.

The fact that the original house of this construction, 30x100, built at Briarcliff, in the spring of 1901, has passed through one winter and two summers without a single light of glass being broken by expansion or contraction or because of any structural defects, removes any doubts on this score. The curved feature of the eaves prevents the accumulation of ice, and it has been found that ice will not form nearer than ¾ inch to the U bars on the inside of the house, even in zero weather. Also that the condensation follows the bars down to the ground line and does not drip. The cypress core bar is chemically treated after being fitted and is considered practically indestructible. The eave line is exceedingly graceful as there is no gutter, plate or other structural member to mark the outline or to cast shade.

The Briarcliff Greenhouses, of which Mr. Paul M. Pierson is manager, are on the estate of Mr. Walter W. Law, situated on the heights back of Scarborough, N. Y., overlooking the beautiful Hudson river. The greenhouses, some twelve in number, are all of iron frame construction, varying in width from 28 feet to 55 feet each, and of a uniform length of 300 feet. Practically the whole establishment is devoted to the growing of American Beauty roses. The number of Beauty here grown, added to those grown by Mr. Pierson at the neighboring place of F. R. & P. M. Pierson, of which he is also the managing partner, make him the largest grower of this variety in the east, if not in the whole country.

He recently invited a number of the leading florists of the east to visit the establishment and inspect the new house and its novel construction and we present in this issue a reproduction of a group photograph taken at the time. The visitors were warm in their congratulations and the general opinion was that the new construction was a long step in advance.

ARAUCARIA SEEDS.

When is the best time to sow seed of Araucaria excelsa and what kind of soil is best? What temperature do they require and how long does it take the seed to germinate? C. W. E.

The seeds of Araucaria excelsa do not retain their vitality for a great length of time, and consequently should be sown as soon as they are received.

Possibly the seeds that are to be had in the early spring would be fresher and more likely to germinate than those purchased in the fall, but this would be an uncertain matter anyway, and one must depend on the word of the importer to a great extent in regard to the freshness of the seed.

The seeds should be sown in a rather sandy loam, in boxes, and be covered with soil to a depth of about one inch. The soil should be kept moist at all times and a night temperature of 60 degrees is high enough.

The germination of araucaria seeds is a rather slow process, and some of them may take several months in coming up. Seedling araucarias are rather spindly objects while making their first growth, the plants usually presenting quite a length of bare stem before the first leaves open out, and it is therefore the practice of many growers to coil down this unsightly stem in the pot when shifting on the seedling plants and thus to produce a better furnished plant.

The best shaped specimens of Araucaria excelsa are, however, secured from top cuttings taken from selected seedlings. W. H. Taplin.

CITY PARKS.

[Presented to the Iowa Park and Forestry Association by J. T. D. Fulmer, Des Moines.]

We are only fairly started on our progressive march in this section of the country, and as we advance we find more and more of our city property being built up with tenement rows and flats, thus crowding the people into closer and more confined quarters. Hence the growing demand is thus formed for a place to get relief in the natural sweet fresh air, and so we look for a place provided for that purpose, called a park, and the people are willing to tax themselves quite heavily to have such a place.

It is of these places, called City Parks, that I speak. It is immaterial as to how large a park shall be—whether of few acres or many—the intent is the same, i. e., to afford a place for rest and enjoyment in nature's surroundings, amid beautiful foliage, and songs of birds.

We will first take up the tree planting, which should be as natural as possible, and done promiscuously—not in straight rows (unless along some park-like boulevard). When we say promiscuously, we mean mixing the kinds—i. e., do not plant many of a kind together. Mass or group them, being careful to select varieties that look well near each other, and do not plant a tree unless you are convinced that that very tree will be an improvement to that particular place. I once asked the question, "What is the object in planting those trees?" The answer I received was, "Oh, just to cover the ground." So, I would say, never plant trees merely to cover the ground, but have some object in view, and that of shade or ornament or to help to carry out a view that may need some conifers, elm, pin oak or Balm of Gilead, and, let me say that while I advise the use of native trees for parks I would not be restricted wholly to them, for there are many trees that are not strictly native, that do well and are almost indispensable in making a park look what I would call complete.

We think that if the trees are not trimmed at all it adds to their beauty, especially conifers and elms. Even pin oaks are finer when their branches droop almost to the ground. So, it follows that the pruning knife should be kept in experienced hands.

Now as to the shrubbery. It should be selected with an end of having some of it in bloom or fruit all summer. It should be so planted as to have a natural, easy appearance, and not look stiff and formal as though made by hand at the carpenter's bench.

Then there is the green, or lawn. This should be so arranged and kept as to have a dark green appearance; and we would recommend the use of commercial fertilizers instead of manure on account of the weed seeds. We must not forget the playground for athletic sports, or the outdoor kindergarten, or the public bathing and boating places. In fact the aim should be to afford the maximum of outdoor recreation and enjoyment for those who are so much in need of pure air and sunshine amid flowers and trees.

The aquatics are also an eminently interesting and instructive feature and should not be omitted. Then, as to the flowers, more commonly called greenhouse plants, these should be, as nearly as possible, in one garden or part of the park and should consist of both subtropical and carpet bedding. I am aware that some of our best known landscape gardeners oppose carpet bedding, and with all due respect to these gardeners, I will say that carpet bedding will be with us when they are gone. Where this kind of planting is not overdone it is fine; it is interesting and instructive and it tends to refresh one's interest in nature and art combined.

The drives and walks should be as easy as possible, free from short curves and steep hills. At prominent places alongside of them should be pieces of statuary, so placed as to give a pleasing effect. There should also be drinking fountains or springs in abundance to accommodate all visitors.

We have now come to the management of parks, which is by no means of the least importance. First—should be a Park Board—which should consist of three or five men, and should be as far eliminated from politics as possible. They should have direct charge of all the finances and all improvements of the park.

Next, under them, and selected by them, should be a superintendent of the entire park system of the city, or a superintendent for each park as the board may see fit. In either case, this superintendent should be a park man of knowledge and ability, for what five men would think of forming a partnership and starting a flour mill without securing the services of a miller, or of starting a drug store without a pharmaceist? So in a park it is just as essential to have a park man for superintendent, and do not put in a man who cannot tell a conifer from quercus, or a a deciduous from an herbaceous plant.

Then, next in order comes the gardener, who should be a gardener in fact, as well as a man to plant the garden. He should be a propagator as well as a grower, and indeed he needs must be an all around florist.

After him is the foreman, and under the latter the men who do the general park work, such as keeping the drives and walks edged and rolled, and the lawns mowed. All trimming of shrubbery and trees should be in the hands of the gardener.

All the men about this ideal park should be gentlemen at all times and under all circumstances, for they are in a position where there will be ladies and children within sight and hearing distance at all times.

MIGNONETTE.

For well grown spikes of this fragrant favorite there is still a good demand. The supply of such, especially in the western markets, is very limited. No doubt there is a lot of it grown, particularly by those who combine growing and retailing, but the quality is usually very inferior. This can be made a very profitable crop if the grower would bestow as much care and forethought on it as he usually gives to crops of mums, etc.

The first condition necessary for the successful culture of this plant is to have a light and airy house, with ample means to ventilate. The house should have the least amount of shade possible, as this is essentially a sun loving plant. Some growers prefer growing it on a solid bench, indeed so much was this method advocated in books and trade journals a few years ago that few growers ever thought of trying any other way. Eight or ten years ago circumstances compelled me, much to my regret, to use table benches for this crop. My florist friends comforted me with the assurance that I would raise some nice four or six-inch spikes. Being a new experiment I naturally gave the house a deal of attention and care with the result that this was the finest and most uniform crop I had grown up to that time. Since then, for many reasons, I have favored the table bench.

The bench should be at least five inches deep, and as the plants at certain stages require copious supplies of water, the drainage should be ample, just about the same as for roses. For soil a rich compost of fibry loam and well decomposed manure in the proportions of four of loam to one of manure, not too finely broken, will suit it. The bench should be filled flush and made moderately firm.

To encourage a quick and uniform germination of the seed the lines where the seed is to be sown should be depressed about half an inch by having a straight edged board pressed firmly down. These grooves should then be filled with soil which has been passed through a ¾-inch screen. The lines should be about 18 inches apart. Sow rather thinly, but evenly and give the house a light shading until the young plants have acquired the first four leaves, when they should have their first thinning. As the plants when grown will require to be about one foot apart in the lines, the thinning should be made with this end in view. Before they begin to crowd each other the final thinning should be made.

For early winter flowering the first sowing should be made early in July and for a succession of crops a sowing should be made every ten days up till February. As evaporation is very rapid at this season the young plants will require the utmost care, as they are very easily checked and rarely fully recover from being over dry. As soon as the plants are fairly established the shading should be removed and the glass made as clean as possible.

To keep the plants stocky and hardy they should have full ventilation both night and day, and as cool weather approaches the night temperature should be kept at 45 degrees, with a day temperature of 58 or 60 degrees. A higher temperature induces a soft, spongy growth which produces spikes that are hard to put into any sort of shape for shipment. When the buds begin to appear an application of weak manure water will aid materially in developing the flower.

Whatever system of supporting the stems is adopted, it should be put into practice early, as to secure fine straight stems the plants should never be allowed to fall or lay over. Tying and training should be attended to once a week and to secure a large fully developed spike all the laterals should be removed so as to direct all the strength of the plant into the flower stem. As the crop approaches maturity the supply of water ought to be slightly diminished; this tends to harden both stem and foliage and makes them less liable to wilt when cut. Cutting should be done in the morning, and the cut allowed to stand in the cool room for eight or ten hours before being shipped.

The grub of the small yellow butterfly is the worst enemy we have to contend with. A dusting of pyrethrum powder once a week during August will usually keep the house clear of these pests. Woodlice or sowbugs are also rather fond of the young, juicy leaves. The usual arsenical poisons will easily keep them in check.

There is also a fungoid disease, which frequently attacks this crop; it is very contagious and spreads rapidly. When affected the leaves have the appearance of having been scalded with hot water; these spots dry quickly and give the plant a very sickly appearance. I know of no effective remedy for this trouble. Lifting and removing both soil and plant is the quickest and surest way of stamping it out.

In a future paper I will treat of its successful culture as a pot plant.

RIBES.

NEW YORK.

Christmas Trade.

Some reference to market conditions will be found below the quotations elsewhere in this issue. One thing may be depended upon: Good red roses and carnations will command almost any price the seller may see fit to demand and there will not be enough to go around. Special Beauties will command from $1 each upwards and Edgely the same. Doubtless special Bridesmaids and Liberties will soar to 25 cents and up. A few may even reach the high water mark of last year. Carnations are very independent and novelties feel quite as large as roses.

The week past must have been made to order for the plantsmen; even the rain arranged things so as to come on Sunday. It was a flood and left clean streets and clear, warm weather and sunshine at the opening of the festive week. Should the delightful weather of Monday continue it will be the grandest plant Christmas on record. Already every retail store is filled with the finest array of blooming plants I have ever seen in New York. It has been a cleaning out of the wholesalers in earnest. Not a good plant remains unsold. And such a season for Christmas greens of every kind. The supply men have been overwhelmed with work without an exception. Holly seems to be abundant, though there is, as usual, much in the market that is only an apology. The best commands a good price and there is too little of it.

Items.

Mr. Noe, of Madison, who has been ill, was convalescing at last accounts.

The "spring weather" has again given the "coal agony" a breathing spell with opportunity to lay in for the inevitable. The crucial hour will come with the zero weather of next month and the February blizzards. There's plenty of coal over in Jersey. The yards of the railroads are full of it, but the cost of the strike must be covered, and New Yorkers are helping to do it with a vengeance.

Someone has been "stringing" the New York Herald again. Last Sunday it boldly stated that "holly and evergreen roping are out of date" and that the latest fad for the 400 is "a tree trimmed with roses for the center of the table." Someone evidently "has it in" for the green goods man.

The new store of Warendorff's in the Ansonia—the finest apartment house in the world opened on schedule time, Saturday, December 20, and it is certainly a beauty. The ice box with its gold trimmings, electric lights and massive marble construction is certainly unequalled anywhere. The mirror effects are unique. Altogether it's up to what was promised, and will undoubtedly be a great success.

One of the prettiest stores on Columbus avenue is No. "400," which indicates a bon ton patronage. Mr. Chas. H. Brown, the proprietor, was with Thorley twelve years, and in thirteen months has established a fine trade, making an enlargement of the store a necessity.

In your excellent photos of the Briarcliff Greenhouses this week you will see the cheerful countenances of Mr. May and Mr. Plumb, whose names were inadvertently omitted from the list of guests some weeks ago.

John Scott, the Boston fern man of Brooklyn, has been expecting a Christmas present that arrived on the 23rd instead of the 25th, but it was a girl and he is "perfectly satisfied."

Chas. F. Meyer, of Hagemann & Meyer, will open his office at 19 Barclay street, January 1, at which time the partnership existing between Messrs. Hagemann and Meyer ceases. Mr. Meyer will be represented by Mr. Chas. Schwake, and will deal in bulbs, valley, nursery stock, azaleas, palms, etc. The calendar issued by Group of leading Eastern Florists at "Briarcliff," Scarborough, N. Y., to inspect the new Greenhouse.

Mr. Meyer is a very handsome one, and must be seen to be appreciated.

H. H. Berger & Co. have received and shipped their entire first importation of Japanese fern designs in birds, houses and every kind of novelty.

Stumpp & Walter have a fine grade of holly as usual. Their $10 a case English mistletoe is thoroughly American by this time. It was "special" and departed rapidly to many destinations.

Joosten's branch at Cleary's was a busy place last week and little remains to tell the tale of "holly trees and evergreens."

The Tarrytown Horticultural Society holds its regular meeting the last Thursday of each month. The membership is now crowding 200. The annual dinner occurs January 14 at the Florence Hotel. It will be a "bird."

John Young has handled a superb lot of cyclamen for Christmas. His novelties in carnations for Christmas will almost transport the "Cottage Gardens" to New York.

Bradshaw & Hartman's 1,000 cases of holly have vanished; the enterprise has proved a wise one. The best always finds a ready market. Saturday it was hard sledding to get past the crush of boxes.

The Retail Stores.

The retail stores were only "getting ready" for Christmas up to Monday and few of the windows were complete. Fleischman had an immense canopy of red paper bells and balls with a bank of of dracaenas beneath.

Thorley's golden chariots, silver watering pots and heliotrope trunks were all quite new. Filled with flowers these will be real novelties.

Small's promise to be the most elaborate windows on the street. Masses of heather and ardisias made a brilliant center. Wild smilax and holly made the whole store sylvan and attractive. Great red plush curtains added richness and warmth to it all. It is worth going miles to see.

David Clarke's Sons fortunately are able to retain their greenhouse conveniences on Broadway until May. This has given them opportunity for one more grand display of flowering Christmas plants and other decorative stock. They have an abundance of Lorraine, oranges and poinsettias and some fine Farleyense of their own growing at the new place at Fordham Heights, where in the spring the iron frame houses at Seventy-eighth street will be removed. This firm had the Griffith wedding on Seventy-second street last week, an elaborate affair, and a large reception Saturday, with a larger affair arranged for on the 30th.

Donker's aquariums are quite a feature of the new store, where red and chiffon Japanese gold fish disport in value up to $25 each. Few of the large retail stores are without these self-sustaining ornaments. Tricker's water plants preserve the water pure for many weeks without change or attention.

Hanft Bros., on Madison avenue, were so crowded that the whole lower floor of the big hotel across the way had been secured as an annex, and here this firm with an added force of twenty-five, manufacture all their wreaths and roping. Their specialty, as usual, is the hamper plant basket with galvanized iron lining, which they make in all sizes and values up to $50 each. The firm had a large order of Queen of Edgley roses for South Carolina among their Christmas orders.

At Stumpp's, on Fifth avenue and Fifty-eighth street, everything is in readiness for the usual demand, and the class and condition of everything was of the best. Great wreaths of evergreen and holly tied with wide red satin ribbon, baskets and electric lighted autos of brilliant blooming plants, poinsettias, azaleas, heather, cyclamen, bougainvillea, dracaenas, oranges, holly trees and Christmas trees, selected and perfect, on every side, out of doors, and a brilliant crowded window of orange trees in full fruit.

To describe one of the windows on Fifth avenue is to describe them all. In nearly every store the same varieties of blooming plants are in evidence and everywhere artistic arrangement prevails.

Hodgson's window of poinsettias was very effective, and the other of cyclamen and orange trees with fern embellishments equally pleasing. Dracænas brilliantly colored were unusually used this year and added greatly to the beauty of the baskets and the hampers. Hodgson had the Luther-Kuntz wedding Saturday on East Fifty-seventh street, one of the events of the season, and two others almost as elaborate.

Alex. McConnell was about sold out on Tuesday, not a begonia basket left, and the big annex almost depleted, with orders enough booked to leave the residue on Wednesday evening unworthy of consideration. Here, too, baskets of plants handsomely arranged and brilliant with colors, prevailed.

Across the way Thorley's Fifth avenue store was a counterpart of his establishment on Broadway, the golden chariots, sedan chairs and trunks being the novelties used, while the big store was crowded to the ceiling with blooming plants of every description. Mr. Humphreys, the manager here, who has been ill with blood poisoning from the effects of a prick by a rose thorn, is recovering, and is expected back at his post the first of the year. Here and everywhere may be seen a profusion of the red bells and balls, the most popular window decoration of the year.

The Rosemary Roseries have one of the handsomest electric signs on the avenue, and with rustic entrance, mirrors and artistic decorations, are "in the swim" already. The president of the company is an importer of English sheep dogs and makes their breeding a recreative side issue. This firm has decorated all the Huyler stores in both cities, and have in view one of the largest weddings of the new year.

Wadley & Smythe have a handsomely stocked store as usual, with a beautiful window. Mr. Wadley has recovered sufficiently from his severe accident to spend a good deal of his time in the city and will be on deck constantly for the Christmas trade.

Siebrecht & Son's place, at Thirty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, was never possessed of such facilities as now for an immense holiday trade, and their window decorations were never more artistic. Their window ice box is the only one in the city and it is filled at all times with the best orchids from their own conservatories and the finest roses and cut flowers the market affords.

To repeat the story of window decorations and plant selections would become monotonous. The Fernery, on Thirty-third street; Bowe's, at 1294 Broadway; Scallen's, Warrendorff's, McIntosh's, Butler's, Brower's and Thos. Young's, in fact, all the great stores from Twenty-third to Forty-second on Broadway and from Thirty-fourth to Fifty-ninth on Fifth avenue, have made special efforts to have their supplies worthy of the great city and the great festival they celebrate. Never was the decoration so elaborate or the stock more perfect.

And not only on these two great arteries of the city's life, but all over New York and Brooklyn the same prodigality prevails. In Brooklyn Weir and Phillips and Whipperman and Thielman and a host of others have made the city of churches look like a Maine forest in autumn with green and color.

In New York on Madison avenue Dards and Hauser and Hession and Hart and Mansfield and Jaeger have "done themselves proud." On Sixth avenue Traendly and Lang and Burns and Sears and Kuhn and Bogart and Christatos all make handsome displays worthy of any avenue in any city.

On the West Side Nicholas and Habermann and Roberts & Grunewald and many others, take their places among the representative florists of the city.

Away up in Harlem, Zahn and Schenck, and on the Bowery Le Moult and Foley do their share to make this a merry Christmas. Their name is legion.

Few realize the host of retailers, permanent and occasional, that make New York the greatest flower center of the world.

With a continuance of the pleasant weather of Monday this will be the grandest Christmas ever known in the metropolis.

J. Austin Shaw.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The cut flower trade the past week was not very encouraging; Christmas orders seem to come in rather slowly, and the wretched weather the latter part of the week interfered considerably with transient trade. There was no scarcity of anything the past week and the wholesale houses were loaded down with plenty of everything. Even violets, which have been somewhat scarce all along, were quite plentiful.

The sales of holiday greens are more than satisfactory, and the demand for holly is ahead of last season. Mistletoe is unusually fine this year and is arriving in perfect condition. Ground pine is selling very cheap, $2.50 for 100 pounds at the commission houses, and the fakirs are peddling wreaths, festooning, holly and mistletoe on all street corners at very low prices. The approach of Christmas is the subject which most interests the retailers at present, and the chances are that cut flowers will be high in price and not of the best quality, with the exception of Romans, valley and paper white, which, the wholesalers say, will be plentiful and at the usual price.

American Beauties will be $12 per dozen for the best, and other roses from $8 to $15 per 100; carnations from $4 to $8 and violets $3 per 100. This (Monday) morning a fine lot of carnations are coming in; roses and violets not so many, and there is plenty of bulb stock. These are all selling at Christmas prices and buyers seem plentiful.

Notes.

The store at 4248 Olive street, formerly owned by Chas. Connon, of which R. F. Tesson was trustee, was sold last week to L. G. Townsend, the new firm taking charge last Wednesday. Will Sanders, formerly with H. G. Berning, is now with Mr. Townsend.

Mr. A. J. Hardin, of the Chicago Trade Press Bureau, was a caller the past week. Mr. Hardin says the Review is found among all the florists.

As all hands are busy at this writing and news somewhat scarce, I will close by wishing all a merry Christmas and a happy New Year. J. J. B.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

We are in the midst of a tremendous business. There is a heavy demand for cut flowers and sufficient supply of many varieties to meet it. Beauties and carnations are fine and plentiful. There are a few fine cattleyas and some good chrysanthemums—yellow and white. Valley is very fine. The supply of pickled stuff that suffered a collapse on its arrival is something awful. Much of it would have brought good prices last week, and now? Oh, the irritation of it; why won't the growers learn? The business done in greens, holly, laurel wreathing, and also wild smilax was something enormous.

Notes.

The Florists' Club meeting on Tuesday evening, January 6, in Horticultural Hall, Broad and Locust streets, will be a carnation meeting as well as a "smoker." It is proposed to have a display of new and meritorious varieties of carnations, and all the fortunate possessors of seedlings or promising varieties not in general cultivation are invited to bring or send an exhibit of flowers. Secretary Lonsdale expects a number of fine varieties. A large attendance of members is confidently expected.

Ernst G. Asmus is sending some fine valley to the Flower Market.

George Burton cut 500 special Beauties from his father's new place for Christmas.

William Berger has taken his son, Fred Berger, into partnership. The firm has a fine store, and a few blocks away a fine range of glass. They are doing a heavy business.

Henry F. Michell has a bright idea in his new "handy order sheet." A space is left opposite each item where orders for that article can be jotted down. It saves a lot of writing.

Charles E. Meehan says that a flower market violet grower was so much pleased with his returns that he is getting his neighbors to send their violets too.

John Burton had some nice Brunners for Christmas.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. have had a rush of business that taxed even their large establishment to its utmost. Fruit baskets are an interesting feature here.

Geo. M. Moss handled a very nice lot of clean and well berried holly.

Eugene Bernheimer has a Christmas novelty in bunches of hardy evergreens —Arbor-vitae, I think.

Samuel S. Pennock received 500 or more fine cattleyas for Christmas.

Edward Reid has a superb lot of carnations and other stock.

Leo Niessen is an important factor in the Beauty market this Christmas.

W. J. Brinton, Christiana, Pa., is sending some fine Asparagus Sprengeri to W. J. Baker.

Here's wishing you a happy New Year. Phil.

CROMWELL, CONN.

The largest greenhouse establishment in the east is situated here and the trade to which this place caters is entirely different from the trade on which the majority of growers are dependent. Many of the New England cities, such as Hartford, Springfield, Holyoke, Northampton, Worcester, Meriden, New Britain and New Haven depend upon Cromwell as a sure source of supply. What the local growers do not have they call for here and seldom fail to get what they want. The New York market is also a large factor and much of the very finest grown here is sold there.

With such a trade as this the variety of stuff grown is large, in fact nearly everything is grown here. Roses have always been the leading article, but carnations, lily of the valley, other bulbous stuff, chrysanthemums, palms and ferns, orchids, and a large variety of other flowers are grown in quantity. The place has nearly one-half million square feet of glass and gives employment to over one hundred and twenty-five men.

Notes from such a place as this must be largely about the general work of the place and a few of these notes will appear from time to time in the Review. A fairly accurate account of everything is kept, such as, for example, the cut from the houses and the returns from the various houses, and here we judge produce on the market value. In fact we have no use for weak-necked chrysanthemums.

Generally speaking business has been good, but flowers do not thrive with a heavy coating of snow and ice on the roof as has been the case the greater part of the last two weeks. American Beauties are in their prime, however, and never have we had better success with them. Beauties with six-foot stems are common and bring top prices. In carnations the prospects are all that we can reasonably desire for Christmas. Lawson is in its prime and the cut from these will be heavy. Early propagation combined with early benching and good care will bring out the wonderful properties of this variety.

The trade on Adiantum Farleyense has never been better than it has been this fall and winter. Good plants of this beautiful fern are hard to obtain.

Germania Club, Brooklyn, N. Y., Where the Annual Meeting of the American Carnation Society Will be Held Next February.

We have been refusing orders steadily for some time. All of these do not, however, mature and come to perfection at the same time, so there has been a constant supply. It is safe to say that no firm in the country has a better trade on this fern than A. N. Pierson.

The petition to take off the tariff on glass has been forwarded to our congressman and we are sincerely hoping that this organized plea from the florists will have the desired result.

Visitors have been numerous the past two weeks and among those who have favored us are Wm. E. Sanderson, representing P. Henderson & Co., New York; Geo. F. Chase, of Winsted; Chas. F. Meyer and Chas. Schwake, New York; and Chas. D. Mackie, of Worcester. W. R. PIERSON.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

We present herewith a view of the Germania Club House, 122 Schermerhorn street, Brooklyn, N. Y., in which the annual meeting and banquet of the American Carnation Society will be held next February. The club house is located within five minutes' walk of the exhibition hall and is well equipped as a meeting place. At this club it is possible to procure meals at all hours, which will certainly be very convenient for delegates.

A great deal of interest is being manifested in the forthcoming exhibition and meeting of the society and there will undoubtedly be a very large attendance. The premium list for the exhibition will soon be issued. Full information may be had by addressing the secretary, Albert M. Herr, Lancaster, Pa., or the president, C. W. Ward, Queens, N. Y.

CHICAGO.

Christmas Trade.

Christmas trade as a whole probably averaged about the same as last year. It would undoubtedly have shown a very material increase had there been sufficient good stock to meet the demand. The quality averaged very poor, much poorer than ever before, and nothing else could be expected in view of the weather conditions for the past month. A very large proportion of the roses were exceedingly soft and weak in both stem and foliage. Carnations averaged better, but a great many classed with the poor roses.

The local retailers did not come into the market at all, apparently, until Wednesday, and on Tuesday the shipping demand was taking everything in sight. Outside buyers who had their orders filled in full were in great luck and if some of the stock happened to be really first class they drew the capital prize. The dealers were in an exceedingly bad position. They were trying to help out customers who were making heavy demands and had so little good stock to do it with that they hardly knew which way to turn. Undoubtedly much soft stock was shipped, as it was generally a case of ship that or nothing. Prices naturally held up sharply to quoted rates and top prices were easily obtained for anything of good quality.

Christmas prices will undoubtedly remain in force until New Years. The weather continues very unfavorable, and little is being cut. And of course everything in sight was cut for Christmas.

Various Items.

Poinsettias, both plants and cut, were much in evidence in the windows of the retailers, and arrangements of short plants in pans, dressed with a red sash, were quick sellers. Azaleas led among larger plants, always decorated with crepe paper and sash, or a pot cover, and arrangements of mixed plants in baskets and jardinieres went very well. Cyclamens and baby primroses were prominent among the latter.

Mr. James Hartshorne, of the Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, reports a Christmas cut of carnations that beats all records, due to not allowing the plants to crop during the chrysanthemum season. Blooms of Harlowarden brought $15 per 100, quite a number being taken by Chicago retailers. A shipment was also sent to the New York market to be sold through Walter F. Sheridan.

The Flower Growers' Co. has been incorporated with a capital stock of $2,500. The incorporators are F. P. Hills, J. W. Newman and C. L. Spencer.

John Schoepfle, the Belmont avenue florist, captured a burglar last week and has received considerable mention in the daily press in consequence.

Henry Baer, Peoria, Ill., was a recent visitor.

J. B. Bridge passed through the city Monday on his way from Grand Rapids, Wis., to Fruitvale, Ala.

The next meeting of the "Chicago Gardeners' and Florists' Union" will be held at 49 La Salle St. Saturday evening at 8 o'clock. Mr. John Thorpe thinks the union idea a good one, but that the movement should be a national one rather than a local one. He holds that a union formed on proper lines would be beneficial to both employers and employes.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Trade has been good and just enough stock for orders. That which is being received is very good in quality, and so far we have not noticed any "pickled" stock. Our growers, as a rule, do not practice this to any extent. (We do save up stock, but do it judiciously.)

Old Sol, as Wm. Scott says, "hibernates" about this time of the year. We have had but very few of his rays. On the 18th we had the first bright day since Dec. 2. This weather just suits the plant growers, as shipments can be made without fear of frost.

Prices are soaring and from present quotations sent out by our wholesalers, they will be as high as last Christmas.

Various Items.

The advance on the expressage on flowers has caused the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., to use a sticker on their cut flower shipments, by which the consignee is informed of the time and date on which the shipment was delivered to the express company. Mr. Clarke, of the Cut Flower Co., thinks this will hold the express company more liable on delayed shipments and will also have a good effect on the express companies' dilatory employes.

Breitenstein & Flemm are displaying a very original window decoration of yule logs, decorated with white pine sprays, and tied with red ribbon. At night they light up their windows with large red candles placed around promiscuously. The effect is beautiful.

H. L. Blind & Bro. and John Bader, report business in blooming plants very active and they expect to sell out clean.

Mrs. Jacob Elicker, of Homestead, has a new delivery wagon.

G. L. Huseroft, of Steubenville, Ohio, who has been ill, is now able to be at his place of business.

Visitors: Messrs. Walker & McLean, of Youngstown, Ohio; J. W. Glenn, of Kittanning, and W. M. Steel, of Uniontown, Pa.

Death of Benjamin A. Elliott.

Benjamin A. Elliott, one of our pioneer florists and nurserymen, died at his home in Allegheny, from heart trouble, at 7 o'clock Friday evening. Mr. Elliott had been a florist all his life, his father having been in the same business nearly a century ago, in old Birmingham. In 1854 the deceased opened a store on Market street, Pittsburg, which he conducted for many years. Later he moved to Sixth street, where he continued the business until about five years ago, when he retired. He was 68 years old, and is survived by his wife and ten children. Four of his sons are still in the business, J. Wilkinson Elliott, B. L. Elliott, George R. Elliott and W. J. Elliott.

Mr. Elliott deserves much credit from the craft, as he was the originator of flower shows in this city, and held a number of the best at his own expense. He believed that to secure his customers he had to educate them, and so did much to create a love for flowers. He was also one of the first to make a specialty of hardy herbaceous plants. This line he took up with great enthusiasm.

Hoo-Hoo.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

The rush is just beginning, and judging from it this Christmas will surely be a record breaker. Carnations are arriving in much larger quantities than was at first anticipated, and roses are just about equal to the demand. The shipping trade seems to be larger than last year.

Business during the past week was fine and of such a volume that the wholesale houses were well cleaned out every day. Prices were held right up to quotations. The proportion of seconds and thirds, to first and selects, was very large, but great quantities of funeral work, distributed among the various stores, used up this surplus to very good advantage. Short-stemmed Golden Gate was a leader in this respect, and sold quickly.

The supply of all grades of roses was equal to the demand, with perhaps the exception of selects, which, during the latter portion of the week were scarce. They were undoubtedly being subjected to that "salting" process, from which the grower seems to be unable to break. A good many "salted" roses have already made their appearance on the market, and many of them met the fate which they really deserved. Of course, in order to meet the increased demand on a holiday, one is obliged to hold back stock to a certain extent; but how many growers are there, who, year after year, overreach that "certain extent" and are thereby the losers. "Pickled" stock never has, or never will, give satisfaction, and a large consignment of this class of stock coming into a wholesale house, adds but another cross to the already heavy burden which the commission man is obliged to carry at this season of the year.

Christmas prices are now in effect and are being well sustained all along the line.

Notes.

Henry Behrens, of Middletown, O., was a caller during the past week. He reports having built two modern greenhouses, which are now producing some fine stock.

Wm. F. Hoffmeister, aged 76 years, died on Tuesday, December 16th, and was buried at Spring Grove Cemetery on the 19th. His sons and daughters have for many years been conducting the business of the Hoffmeister Floral Co., one of the most reliable firms in the city. They have the sympathy of their many friends.

Visitors were E. G. Hill, Richmond, Ind., and Thos. J. Wade, with Aug. Rhotert, New York. C. J. Ohmer.

Seed Trade News.

A well-known Chicago seedsman is said to have recently disposed of 300 lbs. of pickle seed for $600.00 cash.

One Philadelphia seed house received 7 lbs. of White Spine cucumber as its quota on its contract for 500 lbs. with a Nebraska grower.

S. F. Leonard, of Chicago, was a recent visitor in New York and Philadelphia, participating in the meeting of the Seedsmen's League in New York.

In cleaning up the radish seed crop growers near Philadelphia find much less seed than anticipated. Nearly all contracts will be short on this item.

Growers of field corn state they are experiencing an unusual demand at very satisfactory prices. Several growers refuse to take less than $1.00 per bushel.

Messrs. Moore & Simon, of Philadelphia, have been mailing their 1903 "seed buyers' guide" to the southern and southwestern states the past week. Their trade in these sections is quite extensive and constantly growing.

New York.—William Hagemann has admitted Ralph M. Ward to an interest in the business and the firm will be known as Wm. Hagemann & Co., at 55 Dey St. It is stated that the new firm will take care of the accounts of the late firm of Hagemann & Meyer.

Referring to Government seeds Mr. A. T. Cook, Hyde Park, N. Y., writes: "The officers of the government, seemingly without the fear of God or love of man in their hearts, are striving to starve all seedsmen out by giving more and still more seeds to our customers. Why we alone should thus be singled out to be ruined, after we have spent years of time and much money to build up a business, surpasseth all understanding."

Tree Seeds.—D. S. Grimes & Son, Denver, Col., report that the crop of conifer seed in Colorado has this year proved to be almost a total failure. The drought caused the seeds to shrivel in the cone, there not being moisture enough to make them fill. There is no crop at all of Abies Douglasii, Abies concolor, Pinus ponderosa and grandis, and only a small crop of other varieties. Picea pungens is about half a crop. Colorado produces the bluest type of Picea pungens. It is the home of this picea, which is strictly a Colorado tree. Colorado Abies Douglasii is much bluer and a more shapely tree than the California or Oregon variety and will stand the most severe climate. The seed is in great demand in Germany and Denmark. The prospect for next year's crop is very good. There is more snow in the mountains now than there was all last winter, so we are sure of plenty of moisture for next year.

Atlanta, Ga.—Mark W. Johnson says: "Perhaps it may not be amiss to give you an item or so from the Empire State of the South in connection with the growing of seeds. Vast quantities of standard leading seeds are grown in Georgia and shipped to all parts of the country. The Georgia watermelon is famous all over the United States. The Rattlesnake, Jones, Bradford, Pride of Georgia, Sugarloaf and others originated here, and the Georgia grown seeds are sought after from every quarter. The Georgia melon, like the Georgia peaches, are finer flavored than any other. Among other seeds largely grown here for the wholesale trade are okra, curled mustard, seven-top turnip and Georgia collard. The latter only makes an abundance of leaves here, resembling a cabbage, which when visited with the frosts of winter become rich and marrowy; but if you plant this collard in the cold northern and western states it is dwarfed by the change of climate and forms a hard white cabbage head. Some field seeds are also grown largely here, such as Chufas, Cattail or Pearl millet, Johnson grass, burr clover, yams, cow peas and cotton seeds. Our cotton seeds are now sought after by all cotton growing countries. Russia has been ordering some for her experiment stations. The cow or field pea is the red clover for the south, as it is a great soil improver. The peas, which are more like a bean, are excellent for table use."

PRACTICAL HINTS ON FIRING.

An extremely practical article on firing, written by Wm. Kavanagh, appeared in the July Power, from which the following is extracted: Different methods of firing are shown in the accompanying illustrations. Fig. 1 is a longitudinal view of a furnace showing the coal high at the center and falling away rapidly towards the furnace door and bridge wall. Fig. 2 is a cross-section of Fig. 1, and shows the coal high at the center and thin towards the furnace walls. This method of firing is known as the "humpback," and is very wasteful. Fig. 3 is an improvement over Fig. 1, and is known as the "wedge," with the large end nearest the furnace door. Fig. 4 is the reverse of Fig. 3, showing the wedge with its large end nearest the bridge wall.

There are many engineers and firemen who religiously believe in the wedge method, some preferring Fig. 3 others Fig. 4. Nevertheless, the wedge shows the least resistance to the air at its thinnest end, which admits of a large volume of cold air, first assisting to cool the boiler and surroundings at the thinnest end and then being heated to the proper temperature at the expense of the thickest portion of the fire. Fig. 5 is known as the "scoop method," which shows the coal high at the furnace walls and becoming gradually thin towards the center. This method is not an improvement over the wedge, but is an improvement over Fig. 1, providing its center is not too thin. Its bad point is, the center being thin admits large volumes of cold air, which lead directly to a loss of fuel.

Fig. 6 shows the "pancake" method of firing, in which the fire is maintained at the same depth all over the entire grate surface. In this method of firing the resistance offered to the atmosphere in flowing through the coal is almost equal; hence a greater uniformity of heated gases strikes the boiler and passes over the bridge wall, to be carried through the tubes and delivered to the chimney with the greatest amount of heat extracted by the heating surface. In some instructions printed for the use of firemen they are told to carry a light fire where the draft is poor and a heavy fire where the draft is good. The writer is of the opinion that these instructions were printed for plants where no dampers existed.

A very handy tool is shown in Fig. 7 for leveling off the fire. A piece of ½-inch pipe long enough to reach to the bridge wall with a ½-inch tee screwed on one end, to which is fitted two pieces of ½-inch pipe about fourteen inches long, or long enough to go across half the fire. By sliding this tool along on top of the fire we can keep it very level and free from humps. Some firemen spread the bank with the rake. This is a very good tool to use in spreading the fire, as it affords an opportunity to pick out any clinkers or dirt during the operation.

Fig. 8 shows a furnace fitted with a "dead plate" at the rear end of the grate bars, as shown; if we bank the fire as shown we can push back the bank on dead plate and haul out all ashes and clinkers without danger of mixing them into the bank. This method is superior to banking at the bridge wall, as it enables us to spread the fire immediately after hauling out the ashes, besides, there is not so much coal lost in "jumping" over the bridge wall during the operation of coaling the bank.

THE PHILADELPHIA FLOWER MARKET.

I am often asked how the market pays me. I have made money there.

The market has been open just seven weeks. Compared with the same period last year, my returns are much better. I attribute this improvement to there being no bruising and no waste, also to the buyers being able to find my flowers when they want them.

I am always glad to deliver orders. Everything that is not ordered goes to the market. My regular customers have been generous with their orders, yet it is surprising how much business can be done, and done quickly, with the flowers that are not ordered.

Mr. R. G. Palmer tells me that his experience agrees with mine.

The market is the greatest benefit Philadelphia has ever offered to the growers who peddle their flowers.

SHADING.

We have a large new palm house or conservatory glazed with clear glass, and as we know it will be too bright and glaring for palms and ferns during the summer would like some suggestions as to shading, and whether it is best to apply it inside or out. Don't want to use whitewash if can help it as it is a beautiful building and is visited by many people. The house is 90x30 and about 20 feet to ridge. SUBSCRIBER.

I know of nothing better for shading palm houses than white paint. We use white lead and benzine mixed very thin and no oil. It is strained through a painter's strainer and applied to the glass with a fine syringe or a painter's broad brush. In using the brush do not go back and forth with it, as the benzine dries very fast and if the double motion is used the application will be too thick.

We apply it outside as it is more convenient and the plants are not soiled thereby. It will remain all summer without renewing and when cold weather comes it will peel off. The only other good shade of which I know is hangings of cloth or shutters made to order to be rolled up and down as required.

The above quotations indicate the average cost of cut flowers up to Tuesday before Christmas. The general increase in values depends entirely upon the weather, the amount of receipts, the abundance or otherwise of "pickled" goods, and the attitude of the retailers, who in case of an excessive increase may discourage the cut flower demand and mesmerize their customers into a belief that this is strictly a plant Christmas.

My recent classified advertisement in the REVIEW was the best investment in advertising I ever made. L. P. LORD, Owatonna, Minn.

Narcissus	3.00 to 4.00
Violets	1.00 to 1.50

Ordinarily fair demand for cut flowers; plants in good demand. Supply not overabundant—red and white carnations, white roses and violets being very scarce. Weather perfect and spring-like. R.

FRANK M. ELLIS, Wholesale Florist, 1316 Pine St., ST. LOUIS

PLENTY OF SUPPLIES ALWAYS ON HAND.

HYDRAULIC RAMS.

I have a hydraulic ram, No. 3, placed in a spring. Have 50 ft. of 1-inch drive pipe with 3½ ft. of fall from drive pipe to ram and 700 ft. of ½-inch pipe to tank which is 20 ft. higher than ram. Have plenty of water to run ram but it does not give good satisfaction. It runs slow and stops occasionally. Do you think this is due to lack of fall or that a larger drive pipe would be better?

A SUFFERER.

The trouble experienced by "Sufferer" is the result of a friction in the 700 ft. of half-inch delivery pipe, which together with the 20 ft. lift is too much for the short fall of drive water to overcome.

This difficulty may be remedied by increasing the vertical fall of the drive water at the ram, otherwise larger delivery pipes should be installed. In order to get the best results, give all possible vertical fall to the drive water at the ram and if the supply then is not sufficient, increase the size of the delivery pipe. With a 3½ ft. fall, about 1-12 part of the water passing through the ram should be raised 20 ft., but on account of the friction in the long line of small delivery pipes the quantity delivered would be reduced about 1-24.

PIPING.

In the spring I am going to build three houses, each 20x100, with 6-foot walls, and the year following I expect to put up two more of same size. Which would be preferable—hot water or steam to heat them? Does one take less coal than the other? And how many 1¼-inch pipe with one 2-inch flow will it take for each house to maintain a temperature of 50 degrees when it drops to 10 degrees below zero outside? J. L. S.

Replying to the inquiry of J. L. S., if there is glass on the roof of the house only, he will require in addition to the one 2-inch steam main seven lines of 1¼-inch returns. If there is glass on the side walls, larger mains and more returns will be necessary.

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.—Butler & Son, the cucumber men, have started as florists and have built a large house for carnations. T. Thompson is doing a good business and has a fine lot of carnations and a fine collection of plants for Christmas. W. E. King is growing a general assortment and seems contented and happy. E. Leedham has received three and a half tons of the best new daffodils and is busy planting them and digging up his cactus dahlias.

WE HAVE received a fine bunch of game birds from the P. J. Berckmans Co., Augusta, Ga. They look good enough to eat, but we fear we shall be unable to make them a part of our Christmas dinner, as they are part of a calendar for 1903. Evidently they raise game as well as nursery stock and plants in Georgia.

UTICA, N. Y.

The regular monthly meeting of the Utica Florists' Club was held on December 4, at its rooms in the Maennerchor building, at which there was a large attendance, and the usual routine of business was transacted. Two new members were elected and one new one proposed. An invitation was received and accepted by the club by a unanimous vote to inspect the greenhouses of Peter Crowe on the 17th of this month.

The Florists' Club spent a very pleasant and profitable afternoon as the guest of Peter Crowe. A trip was made through his greenhouses and particular attention was paid to the roses, of which the host has made a special study, after which we (about twenty of us) sat down to a bountiful repast. Our wants were well attended to by Mrs. Peter and Mrs. W. J. Crowe, and also the little granddaughter of Peter; may his shadow never grow less.

Prof. George C. Hodges gave a brief talk, in the course of which he thanked Mr. Crowe in behalf of the club for the entertainment.

In the evening the Florists' Club bowling team rolled off their first game of the season on the Maennerchor alleys. The score made was as follows:

Spencer	105	136	118	359
Wilcox	123	129	106	358

DES MOINES, IA.

We have been having winter to the satisfaction of the small boy and his bob, for there were eight inches of the beautiful on the ground. We had one day's sunshine in three weeks, and as for making flowers, well, the less said the better.

J. F. Marshall is confined to his room yet. He has had a very severe attack of pneumonia, and now that the doctor has allowed him to be up and around the room, he is all the more anxious to be in his carnation houses.

All the boys are expecting big things for Christmas, especially in the cut flower line, but as for holly and greens, they can be bought at any grocery, butcher shop or notion store.

The State Horticultural Society met in our city last week, also the Iowa Park and Forestry Association. We had the pleasure of attending the sessions. There were some very fine papers read and the attendance was fairly good. J. T. D. F.

Newark, N. J.—Dr. F. M. Hayes has taken out a patent on a new pruning implement and intends to form a company to manufacture same.

A TRIP TO ROSEVILLE.

Nineteen florists took advantage of a free excursion to New Castle, Tuesday, December 2, leaving Indianapolis at 8:30 a. m. About half way over Ed Bertermann got hungry and selfishly ate a whole sandwich and washed it down with the thoughts of some wine that A. Wiegand was to bring.

Arriving at New Castle at 10:30, we were taken around the city to a new piano factory, where we were supposed to invest in building lots. Well, none of us were in the building mood, so we did not invest. We were taken up to the third floor of a new building about 400 feet long and saw some men putting the fine polish on pianos. As we started out, a man said, "Shut the door and bar it," so we were forced to listen to the bright prospects of Roseville. Finally one of the boys saw a crack in the door and started, and you know how sheep do.

When we got out we found a new board walk which led towards the South Park Floral Co.'s. We followed that until they must have run out of boards, then we followed another sidewalk, which was not cement, but we did not mind that, for it was raining anyway. Not all of us had umbrellas, but Sidney Smith having arrived safely, we were conducted by the Heller Bros. through the immense range where nothing but roses are grown, and what a sight. It looks as though they will have to use a mower to cut the Beauties for Xmas if Old Sol is anyways reasonable. Golden Gate and Ivory, which they think are O. K., are looking fine, also Brides and Maids. They grow one bench of Mme. Cusin and are well pleased with results. Their new yellow rose looks like a good one—clean foliage, free growth, and no bullheads like Perle.

At 12:45 we were ready for something to eat. As it was raining very hard, the hotel people sent a hack and bus to haul us in. Seven of us packed ourselves into the hack and thirteen into the bus. Carl Sonnenschmidt was one of the unlucky number, for he had his overcoat stolen at the hotel. We were late for dinner and were somewhat unruly. E. B. and H. W. managed to get served three times while jollying the pretty waitresses.

It being too wet, we did not go to Reinberg & Weiland's or Benthey's, but were conducted to a luxurious club room where all had a good time, some reading, some playing cards, others pool or billiards. H. W. thought he could play pool, but ask Frank Harriott. At 4 p. m. we heard the train which was to leave soon, so we hurried to the depot, but before the train left, F. Hukreide amused a crowd of villagers with some funny stories which he did not learn at Sunday school. We arrived at Indianapolis at 8 p. m. Some went to the monthly meeting, but most of us went home. BILLY.

A BOWLING CUP.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph of the handsome sterling silver cup presented to the Lake View Rose Gardens Bowling Club, of Jamestown, N. Y., by Mr. A. N. Broadhead. The cup was won by the team representing the Rose Growers from the Carnationists after a hard fight. These two teams, and probably a third one, made up of other than rose and carnation men, will resume the contest for the cup on their own alleys about January 1.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

A while ago I read an article in one of the florist papers where some one was calling it a nuisance to send flowers to friends leaving on an ocean steamer. Anyone enjoying a trip on the ocean will remember what a pleasure it is to receive flowers on the steamer and how much more those flowers are appreciated than any presented on land; and not only for those who are receiving the flowers is it a pleasure, but for every passenger on board, and the more the better. They are no more in the way than in any drawing room or dining room, as large bouquets or floral pieces are very seldom kept in staterooms.

When on board the Augusta Victoria last spring, many pretty flowers arranged by New York florists in all different styles, decorated our dining room tables, library and drawing room for a whole week, and it depends a good deal on the flowers to keep people, especially the ladies, in good humor. They are always glad to decorate themselves with a pretty rose or carnation every day. Of course, horseshoes, horns of plenty and all flowers worked on toothpicks, do not keep so long and are not so useful.

I imagine that steamer-work, especially for a New York florist, means nearly as much as balls and receptions in winter. What was enjoyed most is that some of the best grade of Beauties looked pretty fair at the arrival in Hamburg, and I must say I enjoyed them myself. I have not seen a Beauty since, because there are none here. Many florists have asked me about the American Beauty. Some knew something about it, but none favored it. One said, it is just a common rose; the other, it is a little darker than Paul Neyron, and so forth. But what would our American florists do without an American Beauty? There are ever so many Americans traveling through Germany and they nearly all ask for Beauties.

While I am now regaining my health, at first I was not well enough to run around much and talk about flowers and business. In Hamburg I visited the store of Leyderhelm Bros., near the Jungfernstieg. Leyderhelm Bros. do not raise any flowers at all, but buy all flowers from specialists. I saw some beautiful cattleyas and lelias and so far the finest carnations, but none that will compare with ours; also some very fine centaureas and very good Malmaison, Kaiserin and Testout roses. This is about the largest retail store in Hamburg. Miss Leyderhelm, a sister to the Messrs. Leyderhelm, is in charge and has about twelve young lady assistants, all arranging flowers in the most tasteful way.

For the first time in years, I saw field flowers coming in and being worked into bouquets—such flowers as wild poppies, wild centaureas (so-called cornflowers) mixed with wheat and all kinds of pretty grasses.

From there I went to Mr. Herman Leyderhelm's, Hohenfelde, another brother, who owns a fine place and raises almost everything, especially good lilacs, and sells them at wholesale and retail. This gentleman was so kind as to guide me through several large nurseries. First we went to Mr. L. Gernet, who also raises almost everything and who spoke very highly of the Cattleya Trianæ. I saw some excellent blossoms of this variety, but the season for them was almost over.

Next we went to Mr. W. Runde's, where I found an especially large healthy stock of araucarias and palms; also some good orchids. From there we went to call on Mr. Ludwig Roch, a specialist in small ferns, who was very busy packing and shipping.

Next we visited the place of Mr. C. Stoldt, also located in Wandsbek, near Hamburg. All the places I visited before were in pretty good shape, but here I went through with the greatest pleasure. The place was especially clean and everything in the very finest condition. Mr. Stoldt is a specialist in orchids, but still more so in cyclamen. In orchids the winter bloomers had about finished blooming, but I still saw some of the older well-known varieties, as Laelias anceps and purpurata and Cypripediums caudatum and Lawrenceanum. What I had not seen in bloom before was the new shaded Cattleya Mattutina. It has a beautiful purple color and shades contrary to the others, being lighter in the middle. Lycaste Skinneri and alba and Odontoglossum vexillarium.

Mr. Stoldt was very busy packing his cyclamen seed for shipping. He spoke about cyclamen and how he made his first cross between C. splendens and C. persicum in 1877, and how he succeeded in continually improving the result of this cross. Cyclamen splendens fimbriatum is the newest variety. It is edged white with red eye; leaves red and fringed like a cockscomb. I was told that Mr. Stoldt is the largest dealer in cyclamen and cyclamen seed and is well known for his fine selection of orchids.

Next we visited Mr. E. Neubert, where I was introduced to Mr. Waldemar Neubert, the present proprietor. It was on a Saturday afternoon when we entered the large packing house, and about forty women came in to put away their garden tools and receive their week's pay. Each one was given a bunch of finest valley. When I asked Mr. Neubert about his generosity to the working women, he said: "On Sundays when the working class of people with their families come out to Wandsbek, they generally pay my valley fields a visit and tramp everything down. For this reason some of the hired women have to pick the flowers on Saturdays and make them into bunches for every one of the employes, so they may enjoy them on their Sunday table."

As the fields were so large, Mr. Neubert drove us through in his carriage, but we could not see all, as there are two million square feet to look at, and still Mr. Neubert says he has not enough. After we came in from the fields I was shown the large stock of azaleas, and went to the section of his elegant greenhouses containing an immense stock of all different palms, and so far the finest collection of ferns in Germany.

Besides Mr. Neubert, who I was told has the largest quantity of valley, many are cultivated near Hamburg. For this reason they cost almost nothing in the blooming season and the local florists cannot make much on them. I saw a beautifully arranged wreath, containing at least 500 valley, in a window, for ten marks ($2.50). What would that cost with us? Isn't it possible to raise valley pips in America? Still in the winter the local florists must pay well too for first grade pips, because so many go to foreign countries, especially to the United States.

From Hamburg I went to Leipzig, where I was received and entertained for a few days by Mr. and Mrs. Albert Wagner. Mr. Wagner is a well-known wholesale florist in Germany. Formerly he traveled through foreign countries to collect rare plants. Besides his large range of greenhouses for ferns and palms, especially decorative plants, I found a fine collection of all kinds of shrubbery and conifers, among them some beautiful specimens of Abies balsamea and Abies Nordmanniana; also some Picea pungens and Picea pungens glauca, and a Japan conifer, Sciadopitys verticillata. Mr. and Mrs. Wagner were very kind and hospitable, and Mr. Wagner offered to guide me through other large nurseries around Leipzig, but I was on my way to Kissingen.

In Kissingen I lived very quietly on account of my health, still it was impossible to drop every interest in business. I paid the stands at the market a visit every morning. Some pretty shaded poppies and some fine gaillardias attracted my attention. Long stemmed roses were always scarce. The florists here do not favor the pink La France any more. It always has a faded color and will not sell. Belle Siebrecht is well recommended everywhere. I made the acquaintance of Oberhofgartner Linger, father-in-law of Peter Lambert in Trier. Mr. Linger said it was hard at first to cultivate Belle Siebrecht, but now it is the finest grower here. Besides Belle Siebrecht, Maman Cochet and the white Cochet are doing finely in Kissingen. It is believed that the new Hybrid Tea rose, Oberhofgartner Linger, raised by Peter Lambert, Trier, will be a fine rose for the American market.

I was entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Linger at their beautiful place in Kissingen. Mr. Linger is an elderly gentleman and has retired from business, which is in the hands of his son now, Mr. Linger, Jr. Mr. Linger, Sr., guided me through his different nurseries here. Besides his retail business, he has a good trade in shipping rose bushes, fruit trees and shrubbery. So far I have not seen anything new. Whatever I found is familiar to me in the American market.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

The almost continuous dull weather for the past month has shortened the cut of all kinds of stock. While the cut was large, it was not anything like what was anticipated for the holiday season.

Roses were of fine quality, but not over plentiful. Beauties particularly are of a very high grade. Carnations were really fine and the demand for them brisk. Wholesale prices ruled much the same as Chicago. Retail prices were: For roses, $1.50 to $2.50 per dozen; carnations 75 cents to $1.50 per dozen. There has been little or no complaint of sleepiness or salted stock. Violets to all appearance were a short crop and commanded a ready sale at good prices.

The supply of asparagus, smilax and adiantum was ample, and a good trade was done in these. Holly, mistletoe and other greens were plentiful. The trade done in azaleas, palms, ferns and other pot plants was in excess of last year. Comparing with last year's trade there is a good margin in favor of the present.

That saucy urchin, Cupid, has again been sneaking around the Van Bochove establishment. This time he aimed his shaft at our worthy friend, Garret Van Bochove and got him. The wedding took place on the 17th inst. The bride was Mrs. Johanna Hengst, also of this city. They will reside in their elegant new home on Portage street. R.

FLATBUSH, N. Y.

The closing "bowl" of the old year at Flatbush Thursday evening was lightly attended. Next week's "regular" will be turned into a "turkey special" early in 1903, at which a large attendance is expected. By that time, too, it will be determined whether the New York club has "risen from its ashes." The scores are creditable for a holiday effort, with Riley as usual corralling all the "pots" and so providing a certainty for the three pairs of stockings Christmas eve.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The annual meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held in the rooms of the society Dec. 18. Mr. David McFarlane, chairman of the executive committee, reported that the fourth annual dinner would be held at Florence Hotel Wednesday evening, Jan. 14, 1903, at 8 p. m.

Mr. Arthur Herrington, of Madison, N. J., president of the Chrysanthemum Society of America, was present and was introduced by President William Scott. Mr. Herrington made an address in reference to having our society co-operate with the sister societies around New York and holding a national flower show next fall in connection with the American Institute of New York city. Mr. F. R. Pierson, vice-president of the Chrysanthemum Society of America, being present, made some very encouraging remarks in reference to the future of this society.

The regular business of the society was transacted, after which followed the election of officers for the ensuing year, which are as follows: David McFarlane, pres.; Francis Gibson, vice-pres.; Edward W. Neubrand, sec'y; James T. Lawrie, treas.; R. J. Rayner, cor. sec'y. Executive committee: William Scott, Thomas Lee, Joseph Bradley, James Ballantyne, William P. McCord, James W. Smith, John E. Whyte, John Elliott. Board of directors: William Scott, James W. Smith, James Ballantyne, William F. McCord, F. R. Pierson, Fred. E. Weeks, Isaac Requa, R. B. Coutant.

The report of the treasurer shows that the society has carried on the work of the past year with considerable gain in the receipts over the previous year. Thus ends the fourth successful year of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society. At the close of the business meeting the officers for the ensuing year were installed. Edw. W. Neubrand, Sec'y.

It is also the intention to grow lettuce, tomatoes and cucumbers under glass. Mr. Alfred Peterson is the president and Ed. Marriott treasurer, both joint owners of the old Woodland Park Floral Co. Geo. Bjorgman is vice president and Carl Anderson secretary.

THE NEW YEAR.

"A guid New Year to ane an' a'
An mony may ye see."

During the past year I have devoted a little time and space to giving advice to the young rose grower, which I trust has been of some benefit. Along with my New Year's wishes they must pardon me if I digress a little from my usual line, though still in the role of adviser (it is a chronic habit with me, anyhow), and give them a few of my ideas as to how they should begin and conduct themselves during its progress, with advantage to themselves, the craft and society in general.

I do not intend to sermonize, but just to give the results of my observations, accompanied by such hints as I think will be of benefit to the rising generation of growers.

The desire for self improvement among young growers seems to be strangely lacking, and the serious side of the fact is that those who have the means and opportunity to satisfy every ambition along these lines are more careless than those whose opportunities are not so plentiful.

Florists' establishments are usually situated within reasonable distance of city life, with all its institutions for self-improvement, such as libraries, night schools, museums of science, etc. The libraries contain (or soon would if called for) works on botany, floriculture, or, in fact, any other handicraft, benefits which were nearly or altogether wanting to the young grower of twenty-five years ago.

This beginning of the century is not a time for easy goers, and as far as mind culture is concerned the man who systematically sets aside a portion of the twenty-four hours of each day for study is the one likely to forge ahead and place himself on the top rung in the future. I do not wish to convey the impression that he should confine his studies and observations entirely to his own line of business, as this is apt to make the mind narrow and bigoted; he should train his mind to the expression of distinct ideas and thoughts, such as can only be developed by careful observation, useful reading and systematic study.

The grower of the future must be of unconquerable energy, who will not be content with but the best; sordidness will have no place in his character; he will cultivate the energy to make even more than a business success and give himself a versatile and interesting mind.

In the relationship between employer and employe questions often arise which on a little reflection and the exercise of a little patience and charity could be easily adjusted, but lacking which often leads to rancor and animosity. Employers are no more anxious to part with intelligent, conscientious help than the employe is to leave a good situation.

Whilst cultivating the roses also cultivate a charitable spirit, an obliging disposition and a cheerful manner, and help to hasten the time when

"Man to man the warl' o'er
Will brithers be an' a' that."

RIBES.

ROSE TROUBLES.

I send leaves of some roses that seem to be diseased. All my roses are affected in this way, though they have had the usual treatment. I have examined the roots, but they seem to be all right. I find in the soil, however, numerous small worms about an inch long and the size of a pin. Are these the cause of the trouble? The leaves lose their dark green color and become light green.

WESTERN SUBSCRIBER.

The leaves, under microscopic inspection, present the appearance of having at some time been overful of water and then been exposed to a high temperature. This same appearance can be caused by the plants having been allowed to become dry at the boards of the bench and then over watered, in fact, the trouble, to all appearance, arises from irregular and indiscriminate watering.

The worms described, which are simply earth or manure worms, have nothing to do with the trouble.

Keep the soil in the benches moderately dry, but be sure that the soil is equally moist clear through, and especially where the pipes are close under the bench.

Whilst giving every attention to the soil and watering, be sure that the laws of ventilation are not neglected.

DENDROBIUM NOBILE.

The illustration depicts a well flowered plant of this very fine old dendrobe which is one of the most satisfactory of all the dendrobes to handle, and if treated right will continue to improve and flower satisfactorily for years. This species, like many of the other dendrobes, comes from India, and is so well known that it is hardly necessary to describe it in detail. There are many beautiful varieties of the type—nobile album, pure white; nobile Sanderianum, deep purple; nobile nobilius, etc.

Specimen Dendrobium Nobile, grown by Joseph Graham, Toronto, Ont.

Dendrobium nobile must have decided periods of rest and growth, giving it while growing as much heat as you can, accompanied by an abundance of water at the roots and in the atmosphere. As the growth finishes, gradually cool off the temperature, finally putting the plants into a cold house and giving practically no water, or only just enough to keep the bulbs plump.

In an atmosphere of from 40 to 45 degrees the plants can be kept dormant for some time, and they can be moved into a warmer house in batches as required, and by this means a succession of flowers can be obtained for several months in the early spring.

We have found the most satisfactory way to grow D. nobile is in pots, potted in peat and suspended from the roof, but pots are by no means necessary. The plant illustrated is growing in a basket and was flowered by Mr. Joseph Graham, of Toronto, Canada.

This plant can be readily increased by cutting off the aerial growths, which are often produced in quantity, and potting them up separately. T.

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.

Treatment of Rooted Cuttings.

Those cuttings you put in early will need your attention as soon as well rooted. Do not let them stand in the sand too long, thereby becoming drawn; when the roots are from ⅜ to ½ inch in length get them into soil as soon as possible. As propagation will now begin in earnest it may be well to give you our method of treatment after rooted.

We are very particular in the selection of soil for these babies, as they might be called. Being young they cannot stand heavy or rich food at the start; the only result will be at planting time large overfed plants, while the object desired is to have clean healthy ones, and this can be accomplished by a course of training as follows:

Plain diet, not forced, but grown cool, which will to all purposes serve as a rest, and above all a light bench, with means of abundant ventilation. Plain diet does not consist of old, worn out soil, or any predigested concoction, but plain, ordinary soil, made early in the fall by piling up sod without manure or fertilizer of any kind. The same result comes by plowing a piece, allowing the sod to rot, afterwards scraping into a pile. In either case let it get well frozen and bring it in some time before using, in order that it may get warmed up and in good mechanical condition. Perhaps it is needless to say that to put cuttings from sand into cold soil is almost sure death.

Some growers prefer to prick cuttings out in flats as soon as rooted, but from experience we have found potting each in a 2 or 2½-inch pot gives better results. It is more work to be sure, but in the end it will pay for the extra labor, as I will try to explain.

First, each plant being isolated, disease cannot be easily transmitted, particularly in case should those dread diseases, dry and stem rots, get a foothold while in flats the whole lot is in danger of contamination from one affected plant.

Second, after established in pots, you are able to discard all undesirable ones which would take up valuable room.

Third, the ball formed by potting is valuable at planting out time, also when housing.

After the roots have encircled the ball and made a vigorous growth, place in flats, being careful not to disturb the roots, using same kind of soil but slightly enriched. We use sheep manure, allowing a double handful to a bushel of soil.

Be sure the balls are moist when putting into flats, also that the soil is of such a nature as to pack firmly around them. Another advantage in using pots is that when placing in flats you are able to select plants of one size for each flat. Our flats are 3½ inches deep, well drained and of such length and width that when placed on the bench there is no waste space.

I forgot to say while on the subject of soil that in case your soil is deficient in lime a small sprinkling will be of benefit.

In case of late propagation, it is unnecessary to use flats, but plant in field direct from pots. Last year we tried the plan of shifting a number into 3-inch and while we had a larger ball at both planting and housing times, there was no apparent advantage gained.

I trust you are giving the plants intended for summer bloom proper attention as to shifting when necessary and keeping them growing right along. Ours are now in 2½-inch pots, and will be shifted this week into 3-inch, using richer soil than at first.

CARNATION NOTES—WEST.

After the Holidays.

By the time you have these notes before you, you will no doubt have the temperature in your carnation houses reduced to the normal degree; at least you should have. You can readily see whether the forcing has done them any serious harm or not, and the treatment that follows should vary according to their condition. If the stems have been weakened, you should sprinkle some lime or wood ashes between the rows and water it in well. Give them all the air you can and water sparingly. If the plants seem in good condition, a light top dressing of bone and soil will help them along materially. Mix an 8-inch pot full of bone into about 4 bushels of soil and spread a very thin coat of this on the benches and give a good watering. This will help to give the blooms size and substance.

If the growth has become soft, it will likely wilt on bright days and you must counteract the effects of the sun as much as possible by syringing very lightly in the forenoon, but it will not be necessary many days, as the sun will help to harden the growth and they will get into condition much quicker than they would in cloudy weather. Don't open the ventilators and let in a large current of cold air in order to keep the temperature down, as a cold current of air will do great harm to your plants. Keep a crack of air on though whenever it is at all practical.

Right now we are having our shortest days and often the darkest ones, but as a general thing we expect more sunshine during January than during December, because it is also a much colder month, and although the fuel bills are much heavier, we can usually count on a heavier cut and improved quality and better prices, too, except during the holidays. Those who did not force their carnations unduly during the past two weeks will have a great advantage over those whose greed led them to lose their judgment. Hope you were one of the wise ones.

A. F. J. Baur.

Chicago Carnation Co.

A walk through the houses of the Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., just before Christmas, showed they were in full crop for the holiday trade. The establishment is devoted largely to novelties and this was an excellent opportunity to see what the varieties were doing at this most important season of the year.

We present in this issue engravings from photographs taken at this time (Dec. 19), and showing their three leading novelties—Harlowarden, Her Majesty and Marshall Field.

Harlowarden is a splendid bright crimson of large size and its value in the cut flower market was demonstrated by the fact that at Christmas it classed with the very highest priced fancies in several different cities. The popularity of a variety with the flower buyers is its final and most vital test and this and the number of flowers produced from a given space finally settles its place among commercial sorts.

Her Majesty is a white of fine form and great freedom of bloom that so impressed Mr. Wm. Scott on a visit there last winter that he placed an advance order then. That his judgment was good will be seen by a glance at the Christmas crop in the engraving.

Marshall Field is a large variegated flower that will probably take the place of Bradt on account of its very free blooming qualities, the blooms being of the same size and with a fine strong stem.

The pictures tell the story of these carnations so well that any detailed description seems unnecessary. Certainly Mr. Hartshorne has reason to be proud of the splendid showing his seedlings have made. All the varieties shown are seedlings grown by him.

Lindsborg, Kan.—N. H. Youngberg, who is in the nursery business here, has built a small greenhouse and has an extension in prospect.

EXORBITANT EXPRESS RATES.

The action of the express companies in increasing the rate on cut flowers 50 per cent calls for a vigorous protest. A meeting of a number of New York and New Jersey growers was held recently in New York to confer as to the best method of protesting against this arbitrary and unjust advance. Cut flowers have always been classed as first class and have paid the highest rates. This makes the action of the companies especially outrageous and imposes altogether too much of a burden upon the shippers.

It would seem that the managers of the express companies have acted without due consideration of the case, and it is thought that if the florists of the country will wake up and vigorously and unitedly protest against this action the old rates will be restored. It is believed that the best way to accomplish results will be for every interested party, grower, retailer and commission man, to write at once to the superintendent of his express company protesting against the advanced rate. Every Florists' Club in the country should, at its next meeting, pass strong resolutions condemning the advance, and requesting that the old rate be restored. Copies of these resolutions should at once be sent to the superintendents of the various express companies and to Mr. John N. May, 55 and 57 West 26th street, New York City. Individuals should also send protests to Mr. May as well as to the companies.

In this way a mass of protests can be gathered together that will be used where they will have the most force. This is a matter of great importance to the shippers of flowers. The increase in rates will cost the florists of this country thousands of dollars annually. Don't delay. Write your protests and mail them as requested at once. It should be remembered that almost all growers deliver their goods at the railroad station and in many cases load them on the cars, saving the company the cost of collecting and handling them at the point of shipment. This business is regular every day in the year and it would seem should have an especially low rate instead of the outrageously high rate which rules at present.

It rests with you florists. Protest! Protest!! GEO. W. HILLMAN.

CHRYSANTHEMUM CULTURE.

Suggestions for Southern Growers.

The conditions in the Southern States are similar to those of Australia, admitting of the flowering of chrysanthemums out-of-doors. Thinking that the methods employed there may be of service to some of the southern growers, I herewith append their methods with the hope that some one may be benefited thereby. It should be taken into consideration that their spring is our fall; so that where the month is specified we should add six months. This would make September March, or the proper time to begin propagation. And again, where it refers to the buds appearing in February, we should substitute August.

ELMER D. SMITH.

Propagation.

Stand the old plants of the previous season in some open, airy position to break. From these suitable cuttings, of about three inches in length, are taken in September, avoiding those which are thick and fleshy on the one hand and weak and spindly on the other. After removal of some of the lower leaves and buds the cuttings are inserted singly in 2 or 3-inch pots filled with light open soil and plunged in sand in a close glass frame. The only attention required until they are rooted being an occasional watering or sprinkling and ventilation for an hour or two in the early morning.

Potting and Subsequent Treatment.

When the plants are fairly established and hardened off, repot them into 5-inch pots, using a good open soil and well drained pots. The soil need not be too rich, as only a moderate growth is desirable at the present stage. Pinch out the leading shoot at this time, thus causing the side buds to break and furnish the necessary leading growths. The plants are plunged in sand in an open sunny position and progress rapidly, so that by the second week in November they are ready for 7-inch pots, when a little richer soil than that previously used for the 5-inch move can be substituted, in which they may remain until the first week in January. Now, instead of removing them into larger pots, break a good-sized hole in the bottom of the pot in which they now are, and plunge down to the rim in a well drained and sheltered bed, placing under them some good prepared soil (such as a mixture of heavy loam, peat, sand and manure), say in the following proportions: One-fourth heavy loam, one-fourth peat, one-fourth sand and one-fourth horse droppings, adding some crushed bones, good ashes and a little soot. (Should heavy loam not be procurable, clay can be used as a substitute.)

By this method an opportunity is afforded of feeding them with liquid manure, much earlier and oftener than could be done if planted out in the open ground, and the plants will not attain such a height provided they are firmly potted when shifted into the 7-inch pots. The only liquid manure we would advocate is made by filling a small bag with about 28 lbs. of fresh cow dung, adding a little soot (about a 4-inch pot full), placing same in a tub containing 20 gallons of water, leaving it to stand 3 or 4 days before using. Dilute one-half pint of this mixture with two gallons of water when using. Renew this preparation every two or three weeks. This manure may be given from the second week in January, not oftener than once a week, until the buds are taken, as overmanuring has a decided tendency towards promoting blind buds, and in the later stages causing blooms to damp.

Vase of New White Carnation Her Majesty.

Taking the Buds.

The crown buds make their appearance from early in February onward, and as they produce the finest blooms, retain all those which appear after the first week, the aim throughout being so to treat the plants that comparatively few buds appear before that time. All other than the central buds are removed as soon as can be without injury to the selected "Crown," the whole energy of the plant being now directed toward the perfect development of the two or three buds retained.

Protecting the Blooms.

Some provision is essential for the preservation of the blooms as soon as they commence to expand. In the matter of such provision for plants grown in the open, an excellent protective screen consists of two stout stakes driven into the ground supporting a simple framework of wood and two panes of glass placed ridge-wise, the whole being readily removable, easily constructed and perfectly efficient. We strongly recommend this screen, as we are confident it supplies a long-felt want.

NOTES OF A WAYFARER.

Lockland, Ohio, we beg permission to christen "Tarry a While." If you want to know why, go there. From our experience you can find Partridge easier than you can find Lockland. If you want to see a model florist's establishment don't miss it. Home grounds, greenhouses and general tone of the place, inside and out, equal anything any of us ever saw. Roses and carnations are the specialties here. A house of Beauties for the first time is being grown. The general impression around Cincinnati that Beauties could not be grown successfully in that vicinity is wrong. A nice crop will be had for Christmas, and if you can get them for that time you can get them at any old time. Roses in general are looking well, but Maids and Liberty grafted are looking the best, showing a great improvement over own roots. Strange to say, there is not such a marked difference in the Brides grafted and on own roots.

Carnations are superb. The soil here seems particularly adapted for them. Nearly all the new ones are tried. Prosperity is marvelous; strong stems that hold the large flower erect regardless of the supports. Floriana also gives good satisfaction and will displace Joost and Marquis in another year. In the class lighter, Mrs. Higinbotham is by all odds the best, although it did not do well in the field. Mr. Partridge intends planting it more extensively next year. It gives good stems and better blooms than perhaps the originator ever had. White Cloud, Lorna, Peru and Norway are grown for white. The former variety is the favorite. In red, America, Crane, Estelle and Apollo are all fighting for first place; America will be dropped. Ethel Crocker and Lawson are also two good ones; Crocker is always good here and will still be grown extensively. Many other varieties are on trial. Nelson Fisher is well thought of; also Witterstaetter's two reds. A house of seedlings completes the list and we all agreed that this same house was making history, and what Mr. Partridge knows about chemical fertilizers could only be known by one who has spent a number of years in the chemical business as he has done and his ideas on liquids would bring a flush of appreciation to any one's countenance.

Arriving at Cincinnati, we ran across Martin Reukauf, of Bayersdorfer's, Philadelphia, who took us in hand for the evening. He piloted us to Fred Gear's store. Mr. Gear was wrapped up in somebody's pocket-book, judging from the conversation going on over the 'phone, as we could hear nothing but dollars, dollars. Mr. Gear has one of the finest and best equipped stores in this part of the country; it is a credit to any one.

Getting up early the next morning, we hurried off to Dick's. You know there is only one "Dick" in Cincinnati. Arriving at the end of the car line, we found him waiting to escort us to the greenhouses. We hardly had our coats off before some one yelled, "What's the white, Mr. Witterstaetter?" "Albatross," was the answer. "It split a little last year, but is doing all right with me this year so far." It certainly did look all right, too. An abundance of flowers, of good form on long stiff stems, and as healthy as anything could be. Enquirer, Lawson and Estelle make up the list of varieties grown in quantity. More plants of seedlings are grown, which we forgot to mention. The two reds are of fine color, long stems and free bloomers. We are looking forward to the time when they will be disseminated; we want them. He has others in every color but green, and he may have that. Noticeable was a white in its second year; two pinks in first year and a whole lot of other good ones in first and second and third year. Adonis we thought looked better than it did here last year.

After lunch Dick brought Dan Patch around and we were soon flying along the pike, through toll-gates, to Murphysville, up hill, down hill, over. Well, we counted twenty bridges and then got tired. Had we been horseback instead of being seated comfortably in a surrey the ride would have reminded us very much of the one which made John Gilpin famous. If you have never been to Murphysville, you have missed a treat. Six families of Murphys in the carnation business. We called on Will, Christ and Ed., all growing the "blooming" Murphy's White. For a strictly market variety it is a fine thing. Ed. has it in tip-top shape, standing two feet high on the benches, strong stems and as free as you would want it; but I've got ahead of my story.

To find Ed.'s place, on leaving Christ's you take three turns to the left, and you will come to a house on the brow of a hill, from which you can see his greenhouses. There are two roads you can go to get to them, both equally good. You cannot decide for yourself which one to take, therefore you will inquire at the house mentioned. You will be told to take the one to the left; keep traveling until you come to a tree on the right with a wooden shoe tacked on for a mail box. That's where Ed. gets his mail. Genevieve Lord, grown here, looks like a different plant entirely to what we have seen it before, showing a much freer and a more wiry habit. The crop, which will be enormous, is coming just right for midwinter, and as high as coal is, we are counting that the coal bill will be paid and a good margin left to put by for a rainy day.

Getting back to town we found time to call on our friends Ed. Gillett and Will Murphy, both chuckling at the fact of being cleaned out of stock at good prices. We missed some of the boys, owing to the independent spirit shown by the B. & O. Railroad Company in not granting our request to hold the train for Oakland an hour later. We also regret another little incident that occurred here. It seems that one of our party had during the day called up Mr. Gillett, asking him to secure a berth for him on the same train, which, of course, Ed. was glad to do, and giving the ticket to said party, received a polite "thank you," but not the dough. Ed., of course, was only too glad of the chance to get one on this fellow, so kept mum and gave us the wink to say nothing, but our conscience smote us on arriving at the depot, therefore we jogged the fellow's memory. He pretended to have forgotten all about it, but whether he had or not will always be a doubt in our minds.

The next important event that happened was the voice of the Pullman porter: "Wake up, gentlemen; wake up, karnaul! yuh onla got foah minutes to Oakland. Train mus' be hed ah time dis morning." After a few hot words for the porter for not giving us more time to dress, we were dumped into a foot of snow, which caused a few more epithets for the porter, who made us feel a little better by saying: "Dat's nothin', gen'lemen, to what I done to white lady few mornings back. She done have to get off half dressed. An' wasn't she mad. She swo'; didn't she swea'. I was mighty glad when the train pulled out. Well, good-by, gentlemen; train's off." "O say, porter! throw off my night-shirt." "He cannot hear you," said I. Neither did he, so our friend slept in a pair of borrowed pajamas the next night. This all happened at 5:30 a. m., but still light enough to find the hotel, at which we stopped until we could be assured Will Weber was out of bed, and that he might be informed that the party he had expected yesterday had arrived. It was not long before a pair of big blacks hitched to a sleigh was sent down to snatch us up to the pinnacle of the mountains, an angelic country, truly, but too cold for the presence of angels to be dangling their bare feet over our heads.

On our way up to Weber's establishment it probably was the proverbial bird that whispered in our ear that the handsome house and grounds on our left had just recently been purchased by William Weber, into which he had no doubt intended to plant his "fiancee" should she keep up to his present expectations. We were all in a few moments discussing the merits and demerits of this seedling here and that one there, but one seedling in particular attracted our attention, named Gov. Lowndes. It's a bird, or rather a swan would be more appropriate, as it is a very large white on exceedingly strong stems, and it will go to Brooklyn to bid for the title "Queen of the Whites.' They are now booking orders for this. We say now, because we saw them do it. Estelle, Nelson, Norway, Genevieve Lord, are better than we ever saw them before anywhere. The latter was particularly well done, and they claim they had no trouble whatever in getting 8 cents apiece for these flowers in New York and Washington during the winter and spring months. A few straggling mums were still being cut and we noticed a fine batch of chrysanthemums "Superba," the fine Christmas pink, the blooms of which were not as yet finished. This variety should make a profitable crop for any one. We were so favorably impressed that we shall grow a goodly quantity ourselves next year. Oakland is a fine place with fine people.

We missed Mr. Weber, Sr., as he was traveling in the interest of another profession, but he was well represented at home by a large family and had we been single young men instead of the benedicts that we are, well, we had better not say it.

On our return home we shall not call at Indianapolis unless it be night.

Holiday Trade.

Christmas is but a memory, but to very many it is a pleasant one. Up to midnight Christmas eve the elements were propitious; then came the miniature blizzard, and the morning found the ground and the trees clothed in white raiment. The storm interfered with "all night sessions," lessened the purchase of cut flowers, and left some stock to be disposed of at concessions from the highest prices of the day. All things considered, there is little cause for dissatisfaction, and growers, wholesalers and retailers have much to be thankful for. Good flowers brought good prices, and "pickled" goods met with the reception they deserved. Few exorbitant rates were charged, and each year lessens the wisdom of exceptional prices and unwarranted demands.

The "plant Christmas" is no longer a dream, but every season becomes more and more a reality. Never was such a sale of plants known in this city, and never were baskets of assorted plants so harmoniously arranged. The combinations were beautiful and most artistic. In many of the retail stores not a plant remained. A cyclone seemed to have struck many of them Christmas morning. Everything in red disappeared promptly.

Violets by the million were in evidence and good stock found ready purchasers. The top prices for everything were indicated in our letter and telegram of Christmas eve and were exactly as quoted then.

The supply and holly men had the year of their lives. To them it was indeed a "Merry Christmas."

Retailers seem to be having plenty of business during the holidays. Dinners, receptions and even weddings are numerous, and the outlook for a happy New Year's opening is bright.

Harrison's "White House" carnation is proving a good keeper and commands an excellent and steady price at Charles Millang's, who has the handling of the stock. Mr. Harrison will offer this fine variety to the trade next spring.

The report that Riedel & Co. are connected in any way with any other wholesale house seems to be entirely without foundation.

The growers at Chatham, Madison, and the members of the New York Cut Flower Co. have had several meetings lately to discuss ways and means of retributive justice to the express companies, whose exorbitant prices make cut flower shipments a serious consideration.

L. M. and L. A. Noe, of Madison, have been making the trip to New York by wagon of late—a six-hour journey—but a decided saving in cost, and it is not unlikely others may adopt this plan.

Mr. Furstenberg, of the Floral Exchange, Philadelphia, was in the city Saturday last and visiting his "Queen of Edgely" agents, Moore, Hentz & Nash.

H. Bunyard has engaged as a traveling salesman for Clucas & Boddington Co.

The last Saturday evening in January will be devoted to a dinner and reunion at the St. Denis hotel, under the auspices of the New York Florists' Club. The last "festivity" of the club in the same hostelry was worthy of its record, and this will be no exception.

Dinners are coming fast after New Year's. The great banquet at Poughkeepsie, on the 8th, will doubtless draw its record-breaking attendance, including all the city's notabilities. The "family reunion" on the 14th, at Tarrytown, is always a delightful gathering, and the great banquet at Brooklyn's carnation convention will doubtless overtop them all.

The popular representative of the Lord & Burnham Co., Mr. L. B. Craw, whom many remember meeting at Asheville, is ill at his Irvington home with typhoid fever.

The sympathy of his friends everywhere will be given ex-President Patrick O'Mara in the loss of his sister. Funeral services were held in St. Patrick's church, Jersey City, on Friday.

Richard Vincent, Jr., & Son, of White Marsh, Md., and Benjamin Dorrance, of Dorranceton, Pa., were visitors last week.

A cold wave followed the comfortable climate which prevailed up to Christmas morning, but it came too late to interfere with plant deliveries, and careful wrapping was unnecessary.

This week opened with another rain storm, which helped to manufacture a "blue Monday" and kept the call for cut flowers below expectations. New Year's day will doubtless create an increased demand and open auspiciously the new year. May it be a happy and prosperous one to every horticulturist in this country.

PHILADELPHIA.

Business throughout the holidays has been very fair, with an added impetus for New Year's day. The supply fell off considerably immediately after Christmas, as also prices, with about enough demand to move the flowers as fast as they arrived. Last Monday found white roses scarce and in brisk demand. Tuesday Hugh Graham had one of the season's big balls at Horticultural Hall.

Wednesday was a good, lively end-of-the-year day.

Christmas Echoes.

There is a general feeling of satisfaction over all branches of our business, indicating a healthy expansion in volume.

S. S. Pennock noticed an increased demand for valley. Firms that used 1,000 last season bought 2,500 this Xmas.

Edward Reid had the sweet pea business pretty much to himself. One firm alone bought 1,400 of these dainty blossoms.

The out of town demand was very large, and while there were cases of serious delays in transit, they were few. All boxes were shipped at purchasers' risk. Last week's REVIEW reports were practically correct. There were, however, some sales at higher figures than those reported. A few special Liberties —extra fine—brought $12 a dozen. The best valley brought $6 per 100; selected Prosperity, $2; and Lawson, $1.50 a dozen. There were also many sacrifice sales of stock ruined by holding, especially carnations.

A contemporary reviewing the Christmas market in this city says that the plant trade is increasing at the expense of the trade in cut flowers. This is certainly an error. The plant trade is increasing, but not at the expense of that in cut flowers. The cut flower trade was larger this year than ever before, and much of the stock was equal if not superior to any ever seen here. The drawback—and it is a serious drawback —was the salting.

A New Paper.

Meehan's Monthly Magazine, discontinued with the December number, is to be replaced by "Floral Life," a monthly devoted to plants, flowers and trees, published by the Floral Life Publishing Company, and edited by S. Mendelson Meehan. The first number of the new paper will appear January 15, and following numbers on the 15th of each month thereafter. The idea is to make the paper of interest to all lovers of horticulture, be they amateurs or experts. The subscription price of $1 per year may be sent to Mr. S. Mendelson Meehan, Church and Chew streets, Germantown, Pa.

Notes.

New calendars are coming in daily. The most beautiful seen so far is sent out by Leo Niessen. There are three pages with four months on each. Each page is ornamented by the picture of a leading actress holding a bunch of her favorite flowers. The work is artistically done in colors. There are a variety of sets.

The Bayersdorfer Christmas bells were a much admired feature of the Benedicts' ball last week.

Thomas Foulds is sending some fine Brides and Maids to the flower market.

William J. Baker is receiving some fine single narcissus Trumpet Major, the first seen here this season. Harris has since intimated to the flower market that there are others, and Niessen is getting shipments from the sunny south.

There is a good deal of sickness about. Two of the brightest minds in our business have agreed that florists should train for the Christmas and Easter rushes just as athletes for a contest requiring physical endurance—regular hours, plenty of sleep, exercise, and a wholesome diet—then they would be in shape to stand the severe strain of these holiday rushes.

R. G. Palmer is sending some fine violets to the flower market.

To the Carnation Growers.

I wish you could have been with me just before Christmas on my visit to some of the leading commission houses. I think that some of you would have seen and heard things that would enable you to save a lot of money in the future. Let me try to describe what I saw and heard. One dealer was reading a slip with a look of annoyance. The boy who had brought it had a lot of fine Cranes, at least they had been fine once, then they were fast going to sleep. They had been returned by the buyer of course. The next dealer remarked that his roses were arriving in fine condition. The omission was significant. A third dealer said that he was obliged to sort out all his carnations or the shippers would get no returns. Imagine all this extra work at such a time. Another dealer showed me with pride a superb lot of Hills, all fine flowers, stiff stems, worth $8 or $10 per 100. There was no doubt they would bring it; there was not a stale or poor flower among them.

Now I know there are many carnation growers who get their flowers to the market in good condition at the holidays, but unfortunately there are very many who do not. If the latter will think over and act on these few hints, they will save themselves many a dollar and repay me many times for the labor of preparing and writing these notes. PHIL.

BOSTON.

The Christmas Trade.

Reports vary as to the amount of business done here Christmas week as compared with former years. As near as I can average these accounts it was not a record breaker, but was well up to the standard, which means an exchange of a huge amount of property. Prices ran fully as high as ever, which seems necessary with the coal man 500 miles ahead and gaining a foot a minute! There were just about roses enough to go around, with possibly a shortage of pink ones. Carnations had been scarce for a week, with figures bounding high and growers claiming a sure shortage for Thursday. But Wednesday so many were landed that prices upon them took a tumble. It was also somewhat the same way with violets, except that the surplus was much smaller than with the carnations. Narcissus and Roman hyacinths began with plenty at 3 cents and got scarce enough to demand 4 cents later, with no surplus remaining. There were not enough Easter lilies to fill the bill, but callas were plentiful enough to prove themselves really not a Christmas flower. There were also enough chryanthemums around to affect business, as they were sold at a very reasonable price.

Friday and Saturday were very quiet days and prices slid down to normal very rapidly, fresh carnations holding up best of anything, as they seemed to come out rather slowly.

There were several cases of severe sickness among the floral workers at Christmas, and a fatal termination in one case, that of Joseph Mahan, employed at Galvin's for the past two or three years. He was well and favorably known among the florists, having been employed at different places in the city for the past fifteen or eighteen years, and was also much respected in social life at the West End, where he resided. His death was caused by typhoid pneumonia. J. S. Manter.

BUFFALO.

Christmas Trade.

It is not easy without conferring with my brother florists to say with any certainty whether the business of the great holiday just passed was more or less than any preceding year. And another uncertainty is that a large proportion of our business, and so it is with most florists, is charged, and I don't care how methodically you run your business, few have had time to go over all the charges up to date. Lucky if you have not missed doing this most important part of the business in some few cases. Some have had several large decorations which would increase their individual business, but what one or two firms have done is not of general interest. It's the state of the trade we are concerned in, and from all I can judge the volume of business was just about equal to last year.

The demand for all the leading cut flowers was good, but at the last moment the supply was equal to the demand. American Beauties brought $24 per dozen; good teas, $4.50 to $5; carnations, $1 to $2.50; violets, $5 per 100; narcissus and Romans sold very well at $1. It appeared to me that flower buying was largely confined to that class who can buy regardless of price, and the persons of moderate means denied themselves the luxury of flowers. I don't blame them, for they have had years of experience to teach them that their humble dollar gets little or nothing, and no doubt the holly wreath in the window takes the place of the bouquet on the table in many an unpretentious home.

The trade with many and with the majority of buyers was a plant. Seventy-five per cent of all the plants sold were for presents, and that has grown to be a very big business. It could scarcely increase over what it has been for the past five or six years, and I don't know as it did this year, but it was enough to keep all hands on the jump. It is a good but laborious business, and the wrapping and delivering when the thermometer is down to 18 degrees, and on Christmas morning to 12 and a snow storm thrown in, is liable to make you anxious. A few handsome heaths were handled, but not many. The principal plants were Begonia Lorraine, azaleas, pans of poinsettias, cyclamens, and pans and baskets of various combinations. Araucarias with a scarlet mat sold very well, and there was a very good demand for nice plants of Boston fern, but scarcely any demand for palms. However, the stock of plants was fairly well balanced. It has, I am sure, been pretty well cleaned up.

How many car-loads of holly came to town I don't know, but there were a great many, and by Chirstmas eve it was all cleaned up. Ground pine came in moderate quantities and that also was all cleaned up. The Christmas tree trade is not in the hands of the florists, at least not in big cities, but thousands were sold. There was no Christmas tree in the White House this year, yet thousands went into smaller white, red, green and drab colored domiciles where the head of the family had time to help trim and did not have the perplexing Venezuelian questian on his mind. This German institution has taken a firm hold of our people and threatens to denude our hills of all the young spruce and hemlock that is striving to clothe them. The holly that came to town was good, bad and indifferent. That which had the most X's on it was the worst. Remember who treated you best and gave you the best holly and stick to him another year. They are not all humbugs who deal in this now important Christmas decoration. We have been favored many times at Christmas with mild weather so that we could deliver the most tender plants in an open wagon. This year it was a baby blizzard, which the native born calls good Christmas weather. Yet it is all over and the worry, anxiety, fret, fume and trials of the few days are forgotten.

Items.

We are to have another new firm in town. Another of Mr. Thorley's artistic young men, in company with a young Buffalonian, is to start at New Years in a commodious store on Main street opposite Dr. Pierce's world famous dispensary. The more the merrier, and I rejoice to see the business come up town. The more the trend of business inclines in the direction of the North Pole, the better it suits us.

There may be many florists who feel comfortable over the fuel question, yet I fear many more are sadly worried over their supply and are keeping their houses warm in a hand-to-mouth style. Buffalo is a great coal depot and we should be much better off than cities more remote from the anthracite fields, yet the famine of coal is as much felt now as six weeks ago; and while three months ago you could buy bituminous coal at a moderate price, it is now scarcely procurable at any price. I, for one, shall never think of or remember these times as prosperous while such abominable and wretchedly unjust conditions exist.

I should have brought in earlier in these notes a freak feature of this holiday trade, and that was the call for camellias, and we had to get them. We were requested to make some "old fashioned bouquets with papers, don't you know," and several hundred camellias were used. Gardenias were also wanted. The latter is a beautiful flower and the liking for it is quite excusable, as it is a native of our sunny South and sweet with all; but it is retrogression to work up a fad for the cold, stiff, odorless camellias, which are beautiful only when cut with a considerable piece of growth and its shining leaves, and what grower of these will cut his trees in this way. If they can be got from the South in good order, well and good, but don't let any florist think it worth while to get up a stock of these to supply his trade, for before he has plants large enough to give him any supply of flowers this fad will have flown. The displacement of the camellias twenty-five years ago by the beautiful roses and carnations which came to the front was truly a survival of the fittest.

One more item. Of all the carnations that sold at sight and at almost any price you liked, Prosperity took the lead; although almost condemned two years ago it is now on the pinnacle of popularity. W. S.

BALTIMORE.

The Christmas Trade.

Our Christmas weather here was simply perfect. For several days preceding the great festival day the skies were bright and the atmosphere stimulating, and if the temperature was low, it was only an incentive to brisk moving. As a consequence, the whole population turned out into the shopping districts and the florists' stores as well as the general merchants felt the influence of the seasonable clear and vivifying winter sunshine. The volume of business done was above the normal and few complaints have been heard. In practically every instance sales have been quite up to and often beyond the average. This, too, was with the disadvantage of scanty supplies of good flowers and of the difficulty in moving plants. On early Christmas morning a fall of two inches of snow made the day an ideal one, and with general good feeling, good weather, and good times, the trade done was satisfactory all around.

There was a great scarcity of red and white carnations and of violets. Good American Beauties were also wanting. Roses of second and third grades were in plentiful supply, but all rating No. 1 and extra were decidedly short. Violets are in the vocative, and only hundreds were marketed where thousands were needed.

In some sections of the city dried flowers, immortelles and galax leaves were in great request.

The mistletoe and holly business was largely overdone. The tendency to raise prices inordinately at this season has the effect of stopping the dealing in natural and stimulating the employment of these other materials—a result much to be regretted on the score of taste.

ing were used in this market than ever before. A number of churches were decorated with it that had never been so treated; and the stores, saloons, etc., which are festooned with these holiday greens are constantly on the increase.

As has become the rule, apparently, the sales of plants exceeded proportionately those of cut flowers. In the larger stores the rage seemed to be for poinsettias, while in the less pretentious establishments such blooming sorts as cyclamens and the various primroses had the call. Palms, of sorts, and rubbers hold their own, but the azalea seems to have lost some of its old-time favor. The same seems true of the ericas.

The store windows were all neatly decorated for the holiday season, but there was not the elaborate dressing which has at times prevailed. The street vendors found the icy temperature against them and fewer were seen than usual, whilst the market people limited their offerings to green stuffs and designs made up of materials unaffected by frost.

Complaints continue as to the unusually bad management of express shipments, with the consequent delays and miscarriages. Two shipments, by the same route, which reached the city a few days before Christmas about 8 o'clock a. m., reached their destination, four blocks off, one at 6:30 p. m. the same day, and the other at 8:30 a. m. the third day.

Isaac Moss is the latest of our florists to put into commission a showy delivery wagon, brilliant in paint and gilding. R.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The supply is still short of the demand, especially in colored flowers. Though New Year's trade no longer amounts to a great deal, there is naturally considerable regular call at the season and the Christmas cut was cleaned up very thoroughly. During the week prices have held up to Christmas quotations on all good stock, but after Jan. 1 there will be an easing up all along the line. Prices have been already fixed to take effect Jan. 2 and these will be found under the usual heading in this issue. In view of the usual light demand following the holiday season and an improvement in quality as the result of more seasonable weather, the buyer will be in a position to secure satisfactory stock at fair prices. At the same time no serious slump in values is anticipated.

Now that the final figures are available, it is seen that on the whole the Christmas trade averaged a fair percentage in excess of that of last year, but the gain was due wholly to the high prices that prevailed, the quantity of stock handled being probably somewhat less than last year. In fact, it is remarkable that the shortage was not even more serious. The weather turned bitterly cold on Wednesday and it was almost a blizzard on Christmas day. Undoubtedly some shipments were frozen in spite of precautions taken, though comparatively few complaints have been received as yet.

It has been a very trying holiday season for every one. The retailers had almost zero weather in which to make deliveries, and it was very difficult to obtain stock of satisfactory grade, even at high prices. And the weather seriously increased the expense and risk of delivering plants. Many plants and plant arrangements were sold, however, and they helped to swell receipts materially. On the whole the Christmas trade of 1902 was remarkably good considering the many drawbacks.

The sales of greens were enormous and local stock seems to have been well cleaned up.

The growers got their flowers to market in fairly good season this year and there was less complaint of flowers arriving too late than for many years. One matter, however, yet needs attention. The large shipments of white flowers for Christmas. While there will always be a certain amount of saving up of stock for a holiday, the white flowers should never be accumulated for Christmas. The great bulk of the demand is for color and there should be no concentration of white at this time. The white will realize much more if kept coming in steadily. The demand for funeral flowers is continuous and they should reach the market when needed for this demand rather than concentrated at a festive season when few are wanted.

The next regular meeting of the Florists' Club will be held Wednesday evening, Jan. 14.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Union was not ready to receive its charter at the meeting held last Saturday evening, owing to lack of time to complete the work of organization, and another meeting will be held next Wednesday evening, Jan. 14, at 49 La Salle street, at which applicants may still join as charter members. Fifty-four joined at the last meeting and the membership now exceeds 100.

Since the death of his wife, Mr. C. L. Washburn has learned of a number of her charities of which he was ignorant. Through the local confectioners at Hinsdale he learned that for many years she had regularly purchased all the stock they had left on Christmas eve and caused it to be put up in bags and distributed to poor children of the locality. The money was from her own personal allowance and not even her husband knew of the kindly act. And several other similar charities have come to his attention through those from whom purchases had been made.

PITTSBURG.

To say that we had the best Christmas business for many a year, will, I believe, meet with the approval of all the florists, excepting those who sold Christmas trees and greens; these dealers did not do so well, a large number of trees and a considerable quantity of greens remaining unsold. Holly and laurel wreathing sold up clean. All dealers and retailers report that the work was much lighter, and that sales were made without any apparent effort; prices were no object as long as the stock was fresh and good.

Old Santa Claus carried the pack of his life this trip. It was a merry Christmas and, I believe, the most prosperous one we ever had.

As to the weather, old Prob. did not do the square thing. Wednesday, Dec. 24, about noon, he served us up a very miserable afternoon and evening, which did much to check the transient trade. During the night it snowed and froze very hard, which retarded the prompt delivery of plants and flowers on Christmas day. Prices of flowers were about the same as last year. The quality of stock was better, with a sufficient supply to meet the demand, excepting roses, which were very much off crop. The only noticeable surplus was in carnations and narcissus.

The demand for Beauties and violets was phenomenal this year. The following retail prices were obtained for stock:

Beauties, $6 to $18 per dozen; Maids and Brides, $1.50 to $6 per dozen; Liberties, $3 to $12; Meteors, $3 to $6; Morgans, $3 to 8. Carnations, $1.50 to $2.50. Paper white narcissus, valley and Romans, $1 to $1.50. Violets, $2 to $8 per 100. For wholesale prices see the regular market quotations in this issue.

Various Items.

Mr. Langhans, of the Cut Flower Co., reported their Christmas trade as very good and further remarked that salted stock was not in evidence as usual. In answer to a question as to how the express companies handled their shipments, Mr. Laughans showed me a sticker and time check they use on every shipment, which, so far, has proved a good thing, and secured prompt delivery of their packages.

Matthew Seinnet, a gardener and florist in the employ of O. H. Darlington, of Guyasuta, was frozen to death on Christmas night on the grounds of the estate. Mr. Seinnet was seventy-four years old and had been employed at Guyasuta for eighteen years. He spent Christmas with his family, and upon returning had reached the Guyasuta mansion within fifteen yards when he was seized with a paralytic stroke and fell prostrate and helpless in the snow. He lay there all night and was found at 7 o'clock the next morning, frozen to death.

Next Tuesday, Jan. 6, the Florists' Club will nominate its officers and the subjects for discussion will be ferns and small palms. Hoo-Hoo.

ST. LOUIS.

The Christmas Trade.

Christmas trade in St. Louis was phenomenally large, and especially so with the West End florists. From reports, nearly everything was cleaned up early Thursday, and the only complaints they have to make are that cut flowers were scarce and that they had trouble in the delivery of plants, owing to the very cold morning. The down town florists, as well as those north and south, report that they had all they could do and that they have no complaint to make as to trade and prices.

Beauties, as was expected, took the lead and brought $24 per dozen at retail for the best choice stock. Choice stock in other roses was scarce, with seconds and rubbish quite plentiful. These all sold well at top prices. Carnations had the greatest demand ever seen in this market; poor stock brought as high as $4 per 100 and nothing was left over. Violets also had a big demand and not nearly enough came in to fill orders taken at $3 per 100. A few good chrysanthemums, from Vesey's, were seen at Kuehn's, which sold fairly well. Bulb stock, as usual, was quite plentiful and more came in than there was demand for. Paper whites sold as low as $2, while Romans went at $3. Valley, too, was fine and in good demand. So no complaints were heard from the wholesalers in regard to demand and prices.

Holly and mistletoe sold better than ever before, and holly wreaths were all cleaned up down at the Union market. The usual displays were made of coils of festooning with countless wreaths, stars and bells of immortelles, which made a brilliant showing and brought plenty of buyers.

Not much can be said of New Years trade this early, but the day is a thing of the past as far as cut flower trade is concerned. The big prices will, no doubt, be kept up for some time yet, at least until after New Years day, as stock is not plentiful.

Notes.

Wm. Trillow, of Chicago, spent Christmas in St. Louis among his many friends.

Theo. Faller has opened a floral store at one corner of Laclede and Newstedt avenue. Mrs. Faller is in charge. Their greenhouses are at Natural Bridge road and King's highway.

Fred Foster opened his new store at 507 Olive street in time for Christmas trade. The old stand at Tenth and Olive will be closed after Jan. 1.

Club Meeting.

The first meeting of the club in the new year will be held next Thursday afternoon at 2 p. m. in the Commercial Club rooms at Belleville. Mayor Halstedt is having the keys of the city polished up to hand over to President Dunford. The meeting is going to be very interesting and President Dunford expects a large attendance. Three essays will be read: One by A. Jablonsky on "Experience with Carnations on Benches and Solid Beds—Best Results." Mr. R. F. Tesson will tell us all about "New Roses," and "Steam Heating" by F. B. Call. The entertainment committee will make a report in regard to the club's entertainment, which takes place some time in February in the club's meeting rooms in Odd Fellows' building.

The entertainment committee wishes to make it known that if any florist or any of his family wish to take part in the entertainment of the club, they should make it known to J. J. Beneke, chairman of committee, 1220 Olive street. J. J. B.

CROMWELL, CONN.

The weather previous to Christmas was not promising but the few days of bright sunny weather did a great deal to help matters out. Business is always good at a holiday and the only trouble seems to be a lack of stuff.

Roses were most in demand and the prices were about as usual at this time. First quality, $10.00, and second from $5.00 to $6.00. Beauties ranged from $1.00 to $9.00 per dozen. Liberty brought as high as $25 per 100. Lily of the valley according to the quality $3 to $6. Carnations sold at from $4 to $12 and during the first three days of Christmas week about 10,000 were disposed of. Cypripediums were fairly plentiful and readily brought $15 per 100. Hyacinths and narcissus sold for $3. As only a moderate supply of violets was available we were obliged to refuse orders steadily at $2 per 100.

It was our intention to have several thousand lilies for Christmas but we succeeded in getting only about 800. This failure was due to a great variation in the bulbs. Why should only 800 come into flower when all were handled exactly the same? Of the lilies yet to flower in this batch there is still a great variation in development which is perhaps well, for this will insure a distribution of them over the coming few weeks, but why should this be so? We all know that lilies to be grown properly should be grown in a handbarrow and on the move but even so the proportion of bulbs which came to maturity in this case seems very small. To get them right for Easter is comparatively easy when they can be shifted to different houses as required, but with but one forcing house for Christmas a great deal depends on the even quality of the bulbs. These were Harrisii, of course.

Frank A. Pierson, who is in business for himself and grows pot plants and rooted cuttings of bedding stock for specialties, had a limited number of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine which sold well at a very fair price.

The demand for Asparagus plumosus exceeded the supply owing to the house being heavily seeded. This house, which is exclusively devoted to asparagus, is 550 feet in length, and has over 20 feet of head room. How many seed will be gathered is a matter of conjecture and until it is gathered it cannot be estimated very closely. We are counting on from 500,000 to 750,000 seed. Some of the strings are putting forth bloom, even at this late date, and great care is necessary in cutting so that these will be left to set seed, if they will.

Stock of the Yellow Eaton is doing well and is rapidly on the increase. Many orders have been booked for spring delivery and it will undoubtedly be a valuable acquisition to the list. It is not confined to this place, however, and it is a matter of interest to see if these various sports will be the same in color wherever they have shown themselves.

The first of the sweet peas were cut the day before Christmas. These are grown trained to the supports in the violet houses and were cut from plants which were started in pots during August.

Grafting has been commenced and this will keep quite a large force busy for some time. The 125,000 Manetti have all been received and will be potted as the work goes on. The quality of Manetti is very good this year.

When the express companies raised their rates because cut flowers are perishable goods they took advantage of monopoly and used that power for all it was worth, but if the florist must pay this rate they should be insured service in proportion. These past few weeks have shown that the service is not a bit better than it was before the increase and this is not justice to say the least. If we deliver to the express companies on time and it does not arrive on time, when we pay almost double rates to insure the flowers against miscarriage, they should be made to settle if they fail to deliver promptly. Even if there is no chance of reducing rates the companies should at least fulfill their obligations. W. R. PIERSON.

CINCINNATI.

The Christmas Trade.

Every one so far interviewed reports an increase over last year's business and in many cases a very large one. Especially is this true regarding the wholesale business in this city. On an average, I should judge, that the increase is somewhere between 15 and 30 per cent.

Roses were right in crop and never before did we have so many of them for a holiday; but even then, there were not enough to fill all orders, especially in the better qualities. There were a great many short, weak-stemmed ones, but these also sold at a good price. Liberties were scarce, and fell far short of orders. Golden Gates held a high place and were never better. Good Maids were scarce. Beauties of medium length were very scarce, the supply of long and short being much better. There was not nearly as much pickled stock as usual, and this was the cause of general satisfaction.

Carnations were scarce from start to finish, but owing to the increased supply of roses their scarcity was not felt as much as usual.

Of violets there were almost none, the majority of the orders being left unfilled. There was a good supply of Harrisii lilies and they sold well. Valley also found a ready market, and more could have been used. Other bulbous stock was almost a drug. Friday though, saw a change in this and owing to a scarcity of other stock, all the left-over Romans and narcissus were closed out, and a clean sweep made of everything.

The two days following Christmas there was scarcely a flower to be had; even bulbous stock was short. A snow storm, followed by a big drop in temperature Christmas eve, did the business.

At the present time Christmas prices still prevail and will likely continue until after the new year. Stock of all kinds is very scarce, and what little comes in is quickly snatched up by eager buyers, who are ever on the lookout.

The holly and green business was very good, and the stock of very good quality, holly especially being extra fine and well berried. There was considerable trouble caused by the railroad companies being unable to deliver several car-loads of holly on time. These cars were sidetracked somewhere, but luckily were found in time to be delivered before Christmas. There was considerable winterberry used, but, I am afraid, rather indiseretely in many cases.

The charity ball which occurred Monday evening was one of the events of the season. It proved to be a good thing for the florists who were lucky enough to have good flowers to sell.

Huntsman & Co. had a narrow escape from fire at their retail store. Electrical wires started the blaze, but luckily it was in a well protected part of the store, and died a natural death.

C. J. OHMER.

SANDUSKY, O.—The stock at the Central Greenhouses was in fine shape for Christmas trade and an excellent business was done. Mr. Thouspar, formerly with the Storrs & Harrison Co., is in charge of the range. The store was most elaborately decorated for the holiday trade and attracted a host of buyers. The store is in charge of Mr. John H. Meyer, formerly of New Brighton, Pa.

FARMINGTON, CONN.—Hugh Chesney reports Christmas trade as 50 per cent better than last year, with prices 25 per cent higher. Good supply of roses, carnations and violets, and they sold out clean. Plant trade good. By far the best Christmas we ever had. Coal is very scarce and high in price. Almost impossible to get any.

BATAVIA, ILL.—On December 28, fire destroyed the office and three greenhouses belonging to William Clark. It was caused by overheated pipe connecting the boiler with the chimney.

OTTAWA, ONT.

The Christmas trade at Ottawa may be described, generally speaking, as being quite up to expectations, and on the whole satisfactory. The weather favored trade of all descriptions, and the florists' line was not behind others in profiting by this advantage. Some fine stock was shown; and prices necessarily high under existing conditions, cheerfully paid for choice floral goods suited to holiday requirements. A. C. T.

MADISON, WIS.—Victor Wayman reports Christmas trade as very good. Plants in bloom sold well, such as Azaleas, Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, cyclamen, etc., but no call for palms or large specimens of ferns. Small Boston ferns (4-inch size) sold fairly well, also asparagus. Had a cold time delivering, with the thermometer down nearly to zero. Roses were poor and there was little demand for them. Carnations, as usual, sold well.

The artificial rise in prices for Christmas subsided as rapidly as was expected. The above indicate about the average rates since that time and up to New Year's. Occasionally something special would command a fancy price, but the general average was about as above specified.

WE ARE highly gratified with the volume of business shown in this, our first year, and are especially well pleased with the returns from our advs. in the REVIEW. —WALTER MOTT SEED & BULB CO., Jamestown, N. Y.

WE HAVE received from Mr. A. C. Zvolanek, Grand View, N. J., three bunches of sweet peas, one being of Zvolanek's Christmas, pink, another of Florence E. Denzer, white, and the third containing a number of unnamed seedlings. The stems range from 12 to 18 inches in length and the blooms are large and well colored. Certainly Mr. Zvolanek knows how to force sweet peas in winter. The seedlings were of various colors, mainly pink, white and lavender.

CHARLES MEEHAN, Manager, 1228 CHERRY STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

Seed Trade News.

Messrs. F. Boddy & Sons, Bellevue, Wash., wish to know where they can buy Boston Market Cucumber seed.

An Indianapolis daily paper states that the four seed houses of that city did a business amounting to about one million dollars during the past year.

West Berkeley, Cal.—E. Gill no longer does anything in the seed line, being now exclusively in the nursery business, making a specialty of roses. He reports the sale of roses as very satisfactory this season.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Theo. Koss has outgrown his quarters on Reed street and is now located at 283 and 285 Grove street, occupying the entire building. He reports the past season as a record breaker and anticipates a tremendous business in 1903.

Cleveland.—A. C. Kendel says the trade in Christmas greens has been very good in this city, all the dealers being practically sold out. Though he notes that much has been said about poor holly in other places his stock was as fine as he ever had in large enough quantity to supply the entire demand. The mistletoe was better than usual with sufficient to go around.

New York.—Charles F. Meyer, formerly of Hagemann & Meyer, has started in business at 19 Barclay street, as a wholesale importer of bulbs, plants and nursery stock. The Ad. d'Haene Co., Ltd., Ghent, Belgium, have appointed him their sole representative for the U. S. and Canada for the sale of their azaleas, palms and miscellaneous plants. Mr. Meyer has issued an exceedingly attractive announcement with cover in colors.

Mr. A. N. Jones, Newark, N. J., has been cross breeding beans for some years and has secured a number of white seeded string beans that he believes will be of special value to market gardeners in that when the crop of string beans cannot be all marketed to advantage the remainder may be allowed to ripen and will then make very rich dry white beans. Some of these beans are almost absolutely stringless. He has nearly a thousand cross bred beans and nearly all are white seeded. The pods are of all shapes, from perfectly round to the large medium flat.

Government Seeds.—The Peoria, Ill., Transcript, in its issue of Dec. 23, tells its readers how to get their government seeds as follows: "This is the time for the governmental distribution of garden seeds, and Congressman Graff is preparing to send the seeds to those in his district who will appreciate them, and plant them for their own use. He is anxious that those who want seeds should get them. His supply is limited, of course, and he is quite anxious that they be distributed judiciously. Oftentimes, when there is an indiscriminate distribution, those who want seeds fail to secure a package, and others who have no use for seeds get more than their share. Those desiring seeds must speak to the postmasters in the towns where there are postmasters, and where there are no postmasters, speak to the rural carriers, and they in turn will notify the postmasters of the towns out of which the route runs." It is certainly hard lines when the seedsman has to meet this sort of competition.

MILWAUKEE.

Christmas Trade.

Another Christmas gone into history, but the records from the florist's standpoint hardly show much improvement over last year in amount of business done. The weather conditions were extremely unfavorable for the growers and much more stock could have been sold could it have been produced. Roses were most affected by the continued dark weather, and the supply of them was away below the demand. Carnations were somewhat off crop, and while there were about enough to go around, they maintained top figures. Good Crane and Lawson brought $8 per 100, while other good varieties went for $6 and over, and few went below $4 per 100. In roses, Maids and Meteors in fancy stock brought $15 to $18, while white was weak. Good Brides brought $12 per 100. Second grade roses sold all the way from $4 to $10 per 100. Beauties were cleaned up at good figures. Fancy stock brought $10 to $12 per dozen. Violets were very scarce, and choice stock went up to $3 per 100, and good average stock to $2 per 100. Stevias, paper whites and Romans helped fill out many a Christmas box and the market was pretty well cleaned up on them. Few mums were in the market and those mostly of inferior grade.

There was plenty of green material to go around. The market was flooded with holly and green, and at the Commission House Row, where much of the late picked green was consigned, it could be bought at your own price. Some green was sold as low as $1.50 per crate, and these same pickers who consigned it refused $3 per 100 several weeks ago.

In blooming plants most dealers displayed azaleas, poinsettias, cyclamens, begonias and primroses trimmed up with ribbon or crepe paper and planted in fancy baskets, and everything in good salable shape found a ready market.

One of the leading dailies published both wholesale and retail prices under the bold heading "Flowers will be high for Christmas." Imagine a prospective buyer reading "Beauties, $12 per dozen; carnations, $6 to $8 per 100" in one column, and "Beauties, $25 per dozen; carnations, $1.50 to $2 per dozen" in another column. It is not known how and when they came into possession of a wholesale list, as no newspaper representative called on any of the wholesalers. The article created considerable comment among the trade and many counteracted by advertising flowers cheap for Xmas. Cold weather has set in and stock will remain scarce, and Christmas prices will probably be maintained up to New Years. C. C. P.

TORONTO.

Christmas business in Toronto, and I might very correctly say in Canada generally, was much ahead of previous years; some of the large wholesale and retail men made 25 per cent advance over previous years. It had been imagined that the high price of coal and the heavy losses sustained by a number of the different financial men on the stock exchange would affect the sale of flowers considerably, but it apparently had no effect and the general prosperity of the country made itself felt.

A great run was made this year on Xmas bells and holly wreaths, one city firm handling nearly fifteen hundred wreaths, while another man disposed of about one hundred and fifty bells of different sizes. The wholesale men were pretty well cleared out of red immortelles, and some importations from Buffalo and other American points were made to supply the demand.

S. Tidy & Son had a very attractive window with a chime of bells with a back-ground of holly wreaths. Dunlop used poinsettias, white lilacs, red roses and carnations. J. S. Simmons had a very neat window of azaleas and cyclamen decorated with holly ribbon with Merry Christmas in gold letters.

Considerable activity has been noticed this year in baskets and other decorative material of that kind, and many of the retail florists, who have not hitherto handled any, handled quite a number to good advantage this year. This is due considerably to the new and up-to-date styles of baskets that are being imported by the wholesale men here.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Association held its annual election of officers last week and the following officers were elected: President, W. W. Wood; vice-president, D. Robertson; second vice-president, Wm. Ford; secretary, E. Collins; assistant secretary, Arthur Twiner; treasurer, Geo. Mills; executive committee, J. H. Dunlop, Thos. Manton, Wm. Jay, A. Watkins, Geo. Douglas, D. J. Sinclair and H. G. Dillemuth.

I am sorry that I was unable, through the rush of business, to get my last week's notes out, but wish the readers of the Review, its editor and staff a happy and prosperous New Year.

D. J.

I like the Review very much and would not be without it.—Gust W. Grossart, Belleville, Ill.

ST. PAUL.

If the weather had been at all favorable Christmas trade would have been a record breaker. As it was it was fully equal to last year, while some firms report a very substantial increase over any previous record.

It started in fair Monday, was colder Tuesday, quite blizzardy Wednesday, while Thursday morning a cold, cutting, northwest wind congealed everything, freezing plants, flowers and drivers alike. Deliveries were tedious and slow and complaints of frozen plants numerous.

Greens were plentiful and sold readily, though there was a noticeable falling off in large orders. Lycopodium was in good demand, with just enough to go round. Holly was of good quality and abundant. Holly wreaths sold exceedingly well and nearly every one cleaned out on this class of goods. Mistletoe was of excellent quality and in big demand, so that everything sold out clean. There was some call for wild smilax and gray and green moss, but needle pines were uncalled for and unsold. Altogether the green trade was most satisfactory.

In cut flowers roses were most conspicuous by their absence. While Meteors were of fair quality and in fair supply, other roses were way off and very scarce. Beauties sold better than at any time for several years and enough good stock could not be had. Carnations were the redeeming feature of the trade, being of good quality, fairly abundant and selling well, bringing all the way from $1.00 to $2.50 per dozen. Violets were eagerly taken at $4.00 per 100, while valley, Romans and paper whites helped to make up the poor man's box of assorted flowers.

There was a better display than usual of blooming plants. Azaleas, cinerarias, poinsettias, primulas and cyclamen all sold well. A few baskets with plants were seen but the majority of buyers preferred choice flowers to plants.

Shipping trade broke all records, but the intense cold delayed trains, froze flowers, disappointed customers and demoralized business in general. One firm has claims against the express companies aggregating $200 for delayed and frozen shipments. We will all await with interest the outcome of the claims. Two shipments of violets from Grand Rapids came in Friday morning, having been three days on the way.

One leading firm lost nearly 100 poinsettias by freezing, another party lost two dozen palms in a church by freezing.

Since the florists' minds have been diverted from Christmas by cold weather the coal question becomes the uppermost theme. About the only thing in the fuel line obtainable now is Illinois coal and even this may run short.

Arnold Ringier was in town Saturday and was mistaken for J. J. Hill, the railroad king.

PONTIAC, ILL.—W. J. Miller & Son say: "We have enjoyed the largest Christmas trade this year that we have ever experienced, although the prices were very much higher. The only falling off we noticed was in the call for potted plants as a blizzard of immense proportions struck us December 24, making it impossible for the buyers to get out, and this cold compelled us to wrap everything so very much to guard against freezing. The call for cut flowers was confined principally to carnations, although we sold a great many roses. Taking it all together the trade was very satisfactory."

THE LARGEST FLORISTS' SUPPLY HOUSE IN AMERICA wish all their host of customers a happy and prosperous New Year and will be glad to see them, one and all, at any time, at 50, 52, 54, 56 N. Fourth St., PHILADELPHIA.

WINONA, MINN.

Christmas sales were far ahead of former years. We consider our own sales to have been 150 per cent higher than any previous year, mainly due to the fact that we have this year opened a flower store in the heart of the city in connection with our greenhouses.

Roses brought from $1 to $2; carnations, fancy, $1 to $1.25; poinsettias, 25 cents each; chrysanthemums, $2 to $3; violets, $1.50 per 100. Bulb stuff did not sell very well.

In flowering plants we sold any quantity of azaleas, begonias, cyclamens, primulas, peppers, Boston ferns, hyacinths and narcissus. As we always trim the pots before selling, they take very well.

Holly and green were cleared by noon, Dec. 24, and no more could be had. We may also mention that an advertisement of holly wreaths, made by ourselves, which we put in a local paper, brought us three hundred and seventy-one sales at from 25 cents to $2 each, while other years not a dozen were sold.

Ed. Kirchner.

WARNING.

A young man giving his name as Charles Deuvall, who claimed to have worked for the Gasser Co., of Cleveland, and Miller & Sons, of Toronto, while working for me made a few small collections without turning in any money, and in other ways cheated me out of a small amount with which he was trusted,—in all perhaps $15 or $20.

He also ransacked the boarding house where he staid, but was caught at it and made to disgorge, but for some reason not turned over to the police.

He is about 21 years old, sandy complexion, blue eyes, about 5 feet 8 inches high, weight about 145 to 150 pounds, and speaks with a Canadian accent. He is a heavy cigarette smoker. A chance remark leads me to believe that he served time in a penal institution for about six months making twine.

E. A. Kuhnke.

East Toledo, O., Dec. 26, 1902.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.

Christmas trade was first-class. Cut flowers and flowering plants sold well. Florists nearly all sold out at good prices.

Coal is very scarce and prices are soaring; $14.00 for anthracite and $9.00 for bituminous, and the latter can only be purchased from the city authorities in ton lots. Florists who come out even at the end of the season will be doing well.

Christmas Trade.

Christmas came in very cold. The thermometer stood 16 degrees above zero. Nevertheless Christmas trade showed a small increase over last year. The chief call was for red flowers. American Beauties sold at $12 per dozen, Maids and Brides from $2 to $2.50 a dozen. Carnations, extra select stock, brought $1 a dozen; seconds, 75 cents a dozen; Romans and narcissus from 75 cents to $1 a dozen. Blooming plants, such as very large Gloire de Lorraine begonias brought from $2.50 to $3 each. Some very fine plants of cyclamens were seen in the different stores and sold well. In Christmas greens there was not enough to go around—all cleaned out. Taken all around it was satisfactory, considering the cold snap which came so unexpectedly.

Jacob Schulz made a very handsome display in his show window. It consisted of three very large marriage bells made of red immortelles and contained some very fine plants of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine and orange plants bearing some fine fruit, which were admired very much.

F. Walker & Co. report a very heavy Christmas trade this year.

Nanz & Neuner Co. made a beautiful display at their store of cut flowers and blooming plants, having some very fine blooms of cut chrysanthemums, which found a ready sale.

Mrs. Chas. Rayner came in also for a large share of trade, having some very fine ferns and palms, which sold at sight.

Mrs. Chas. Reimers made a beautiful display at her store and was kept busy getting out orders.

Mrs. C. B. Thompson reports a larger Xmas trade than last year.

Joseph Coenen & Co. had all they could do to get their ferns and palms, in which they had a good trade, delivered in the city.

Mr. John Bohrman and his bride have returned from an extended wedding trip, having taken in New York, Philadelphia and Washington. John advises every old bachelor to get married.

Wishing the FLORISTS' REVIEW a prosperous and happy New Year, I will close. H. LICHTEFELD.

MARQUETTE, MICH.—The Stafford Greenhouses were damaged by fire the morning of Dec. 23, the office, potting shed and boiler room being totally destroyed. The greenhouses were only slightly damaged and the stock was saved. The insurance does not wholly cover the loss. The burned portion of the establishment will be rebuilt at once. The fire came at a very unfortunate time and interfered seriously with the Christmas trade.

ATLANTA, GA.—The Rose Hill Floral Co. has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000.

OMAHA.

Christmas trade in Omaha was quite satisfactory in every respect except one, and that one—the weather—bothers every florist throughout the breadth of the land. We had three weeks of dark weather prior to Dec. 19, and then came snow, with the thermometer registering zero and below. The day before Christmas was the worst of all. Eight o'clock a. m. showed 6 below and old Eolus, with his Arctic blasts, allowed the highest point for the day to be but 8 above. Such weather naturally kept many buyers indoors and many stores would otherwise have done 50 per cent more business. However, everyone is satisfied with what he has done.

Flowering plants sold much better than last year, the call being principally for azaleas and primroses, while cyclamens, cinerarias and potted narcissus sold well too. Poinsettias as a plant or in pans with stevias and other flowers sold as well as expected. Many of the novelties seen in Eastern stores cannot be found here. The cause? I would not venture to say. May be our people are too conservative; however, we haven't them.

The prices are about the same as last year, probably a little lower, and the supply about equal to the demand, with violets the scarcest in years. Beauties sold at from $4.50 to $15 per dozen; first quality of other sorts of roses at from $3 to $3.50 down to $1.50. Carnations sold at from $1 to $1.50 per dozen; hyacinths and narcissus at from 75 cents to $1 per dozen; violets at 75 cents to $1.50 per bunch of 25; stevias at from 50 to 75 cents per dozen. Poinsettias as a cut bloom sold only fairly well at 50 and 60 cents each.

WHITE OAK.

I am in a position to buy a lot of white oak lumber cheap. Will it be equally as durable for benches in a carnation house as cypress? C. G. F.

In answer to C. G. F. white oak will make good bench material and will last equally as well, or better, than the grade of cypress ordinarily used for benches.

Here is ANOTHER BARGAIN IN BULBS for Easter Forcing.

All the Paper White Grandiflora, Horsfieldii, Emperor, Empress, and Double-Nosed Von Sion Narcissus offered in issue of Dec. 25, ARE SOLD. We could have sold them two or three times over. People know a good thing when they see it. We offer below some other good stock at equally low prices. If you can use any of the bulbs offered, let us have your order without delay, before we are sold out. Now that the holidays are past, florists are looking forward to Easter, which comes late this spring—April 12—so that there is plenty of time to get any of the stock here offered in bloom by that time. Bulbous stock is selling for good prices on account of the scarcity of other flowers—due to the high price of coal—and as bulbs can be grown in a low temperature, they will make money for you.

Everything offered is in first-class shape, and is a GREAT BARGAIN AT THESE REDUCED PRICES. Send for complete list of surplus bulbs, which we are closing out at equally low prices. When ordering please refer to this special offer.

SMALL SIZED NAMED HYACINTHS—This is wonderfully fine stock for the price. The bulbs are of large size—12-13 cm. in circumference—and are splendid for Easter forcing, either for cutting or growing in pans. Nothing is more readily salable. Although the price is low, the bulbs are first-class. They will throw almost as good flowers as the larger and higher priced bulbs. If you have never flowered them, try a thousand or two. You will be pleased with the results. They cannot fail to make money for you. The following pink varieties at only $1.50 per 100; $12.00 per 1000, (worth $16.00 per 1000), viz.: Baron van Tuyll, Gen. Pelissier, Gertrude, Gigantea, Robt Steiger, Solfatara.

The following blue varieties at only $1 50 per 100; $12.00 per 1000, (worth $16.00 per 1000), viz.: Grand Maitre, King of the Blues, La Peyronse, Chas Dickens, Blondin, Czar Peter, also Tamerlan (yellow).

The following white varieties at only $2.00 per 100; $16 00 per 1000, (worth $22.00 per 1000), viz.: Baroness van Tuyll, Grandeur a Merveille, Blanchard, L'Innocence, Mme. Van der Hoop, Paix de l'Europe.

FINE NAMED HYACINTHS, SINGLE AND DOUBLE—We offer also a limited stock of the following varieties in first-sized bulbs; $3 00 per 100; $25 00 per 1000, (worth $35.00 per 1000): La Peyrouse, Regulus, Tamerlan, Grand Lilas, La Pluie d'Or, Gen. Pelissier, Grandeur a Merveille, Blocksberg, Bouquet Tendre, Czar Nicholas, Crown Prince of Sweden, Flevo, Garrick, Grootvorst, Gen. Antinck, King of Wurtemburg, La Tour d'Auvergne, La Virginite, Lord Anson, Lord Raglan, Othello, Prince of Orange, Prince of Saxe-Weimar, Princess Royal.

HYACINTHS IN SEPARATE COLORS, SINGLE AND DOUBLE—We still have a few of these left which we offer as long as unsold at $2.50 per 100; $20.00 per 1000 (worth $26.00 per 1000).

WHITE ROMAN HYACINTHS—We still have a few cases of fine 12-15 cm. bulbs which we offer as long as unsold at $15.00 per 1000, (worth $25.00 per 1000).

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

After the Holidays.

A very useful and seasonable hint just now is that all plant growers should make not only a mental memorandum, but a written one, of what it is best to grow for the trade of another Christmas, which we all hope to live to see. Most all of us are liable to be a little long on some things and short on others, and what knocks the profit off our trade is when we have half of a batch of stuff left over and no more demand for it. This is not as serious a matter at Christmas as it is at Easter, for we now have weeks of a gay time before us, yet the plant-purchasing season takes a great tumble after New Year's and a surplus has to go off at a much reduced price.

Prices.

I have about made up my mind that a well-grown plant is worth all that can be got for it by the retailer. Some sensible man, I think it was Robert Craig, once said at a convention that our flowers were worth every cent we could get for them, however seemingly extravagant was the price. Think of the expense of doing business now compared with twenty years ago. High rents, high wages, illumination, costly delivery wagons (we won't mention fuel; there is not enough of it to talk about) boxes, ribbons and no end of accessories, all add to the expense of conducting our retail business, and I doubt very much if our prices have advanced in proportion.

The wholesale grower of plants, if he grows well (and the desirable article has an enviable position) sells clean out, even if the price is moderate. Every foot of bench room has returned him a fair profit. He has not to fuss and trim each individual plant, or waste precious time in letting the fastidious buyer look and squint and pick and choose her selection. We can't, however, all be wholesale growers; the majority must face the public, and when not overcrowded with work it is a pleasant duty. Our customers are not all alike any more than we florists are. We must deal with those who are small and irritating or we would not appreciate the broad-minded and liberal; we must have evil to know what goodness is; we must have sorrow to appreciate joy, and darkness to know what light is.

Novelties.

Lucky is the man who can think of some novelty and be able to work up a good supply before everybody else has it. It is not so easily done in our business, yet there are a few smart brains in the business who think ahead and introduce some novelty, either a new plant or an old plant in a new form. The ninety-nine per cent of us merely strive to grow well what we have seen someone else grow, and if we succeed we are doing all that can be expected.

While it is most desirable that novelties should appear occasionally, the great majority of our patrons will be satisfied with good plants and flowers of our old favorites. The berried plants, particularly ardisia, sold well and always will. Azaleas were in good demand. Pans of poinsettias are now a standard Christmas plant. Pans of cyclamen, or a good, large single plant is always salable. Begonia Lorraine captures all, and not only are plants of it sold by the thousand, but it is used largely for mantel and center piece decoration. Among foliage plants Christmas does not seem the season for palms —perhaps they are a little somber—but Pandanus Veitchii, Boston fern and araucarias sold well. None of the above will go out of fashion.

Azaleas.

You will possibly have a number of the early forcing azaleas that were not out quite far enough to sell and which you have been forcing in a strong heat. Don't put them back in a cold house, but keep them in a temperature of 60 degrees with plenty of water. Incidentally I might mention here that we often have complaint that a fine azalea which has been sold is "all dried up" within two or three days of its sale. The sole cause of this is want of water, and it would be a good plan to attach a card to every azalea sold, with the following written upon it: "Please thoroughly water this plant twice a day." Not only do the azaleas we sell suffer, but those in the stores are often ruined for want of attention, for the florist salesman is not always a gardener. Once the azalea flowers wilt they are gone. The plant is not ruined, but its sale is gone.

About this time you will notice a lot of young growths on your azaleas that are being kept cool for Easter. Even if kept at 40 degrees the young growths will start on last fall's imported plants. You must pull off these growths or the flower bud will dry up and disappear and there will be no bloom.

Poinsettias.

Poinsettias that have been cut, if grown in pots, can be laid down beneath a bench where they may remain until April. Not a drop of water is necessary, and the canes can and should be ripened until they look as dry as walking sticks, yet are full of life. Those grown in benches and which have been cut should not be pulled up at once if you need them for propagating, but let them dry up in the bed. In two weeks you can lift them and pack away in flats with some soil around the roots.

Bouvardia.

Bouvardia is a flower that has been asked for quite a little this winter. If you have a bed of it it will be sure to be cut close just now. This beautiful plant flowers well up to Christmas in a house where the temperature does not go below 50 degrees at night, but a second crop needs more heat. If you want more flowers from it, it must have 60 degrees at night and the bed should be mulched. It is a bad plant for red spider, yet as the plant enjoys spraying there should be no trouble on that account.

Stevia.

Don't forget to save a dozen plants of Stevia serratifolia. It seems we never have enough of it. It may not be the most profitable plant we grow, yet you can charge for it and make it profitable. Our best customers ask for it, always of course associated with other flowers. Don't put the few old plants under the bench; give them a light, cool position and you will get plenty of cuttings in March.

Astilbe.

Some correspondent wrote a very good article on astilbe a few weeks ago. I can't improve on it, except to say it is not well to limit the time of foreing to any number of weeks, for many times we have wished that we had another week to spare and have had to give them a great heat. Just as soon after New Year's as you can, get them into the houses. For the first month they are just as well beneath a bench, for they take about that time before there is much growth to hurt for want of light.

Crimson Ramblers.

Crimson Rambler roses that have been grown in pots all summer can be brought in after New Year's. Sometimes these plants have started from the eyes on the strong canes. If that is the case, prune these lateral growths back to two or three eyes. No other pruning is needed except to just take off the tops of the main growths, which would not give you flower—a foot or so. This may seem to be starting them quite early, but the flower is a deeper shade and the plant altogether better if they can be flowered in a temperature of 55 degrees than if forced the last few weeks in 65 degrees. The first month they will want only 45 degrees at night.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

As soon as the cuttings in the bench have rootlets half an inch in length they should be potted without delay. Procrastination at this stage is frequently the cause of a whole season's worry and trouble. Every day after they are rooted that they are allowed to stand in the bench is sapping their constitution, allowing the roots to become attenuated, unmanageable and easily broken, all of which tends to act as a check on the young plant just when it requires the best of nursing to give it a good start in life.

The intelligent care and attention bestowed on young stock at this stage is the first essential in the way to success. Soil for first potting should not contain too much manure, as this is liable to sicken the roots before they have become accustomed to this kind of food. Compost which was left over at rose planting time, and which has been carefully attended to and kept clear of weeds during summer, is nearly the most perfect material for this purpose. To further suit it for the requirements it should be made fine by passing it through a half-inch screen.

Two-inch standard pots are in every way suitable for first potting. It is bad policy to mix with them any of the older styles of pots, as this causes inequality in drying out, by which many of the plants must suffer. The nearer we approach to uniformity in moistness, so much greater is the chance of success.

To give the young plants the best of chances, potting should be uniform, placing the plant in the pot, so that the roots will be about one-third the depth of the pot down from the rim, making the soil equally firm, and leaving about one-fourth of an inch above the soil to facilitate watering.

Water as soon after potting as possible, and do not let the plants stand too long in the potting shed where there is always more or less draught. Select a light, airy bench in a temperature of 56 degrees on which to place the young stock, even at the expense of throwing out something good, as it is unlikely that young stock will do well where established stock has refused to thrive.

A good material (which is always handy and inexpensive) to make a bed to set the young stock on is ashes passed through a half-inch screen. This makes a bottom which is more porous than sand, does not shift with watering, is not apt to become muddy, and has the merit (if kept fresh) of keeping worms away.

The soil in the pots should be moistened clear through, and as this cannot be accomplished by one watering, they should be watered at intervals until this condition is obtained. Shade during bright sunshine for the first four days, and in fact at any time if the plants show any inclination to wilt, until they are well established. Ribes.

ROSE TROUBLES.

I send a plant of Bridesmaid rose. I have a whole house in same condition. What is the trouble? The soil is three parts soil and one of cow manure and a little lime and clay—no bone meal. Have been careful regarding temperature, night and day, about 60 degrees.

Is gumbo soil good for mixing in compost for roses—say 1 to 4? J. R. E.

It is a hard matter to say just what is the trouble with these roses. The specimen sent shows a very weak constitution, which can be brought about by various causes. The roots while showing no signs of any disease are very weak and inactive, which can be partly attributed to too much manure in the compost and which would also partly account for the soft texture of both foliage and wood.

A suitable compost for roses is four of fibry loam to one of well decomposed cow manure. The loam should contain less than fifty per cent of clay and less than five per cent of lime.

Even when in the best of health 60 degrees is too high a temperature for Brides and Maids, and they should not be subjected to it for many hours at a stretch; 56 degrees is a safe, sure and in every way a more suitable temperature. With this and careful watering and ventilating is about all that can be done for them at this season. No attempt should be made to feed them until they are over the trouble.

"Gumbo" soil I am unacquainted with, and therefore can say nothing of its merits. It is, however, safest to use only those soils which have been proved to be productive in preference to those of which we are ignorant of the qualities. Ribes.

Petunia Giant of California.

PETUNIA "GIANT OF CALIFORNIA."

The illustration shows a specimen plant of petunia "Giant of California," with pure white flowers. This strain originated in California and it is a true daughter of the "Golden West," exceedingly luxuriant in growth.

The flowers are marvels of beauty in size, color and form, and are distinguished from other types by their great size, wide open throats and their wavy and ruffled margins. Their shades of color and markings are wonderful in beauty and diversity. Shades of pink, mauve, blush, crimson and pure white, lined and marked in beautiful contrast. Some of them have throats of bright yellow with black lines, some of pale pink with crimson blotches, and others with black throats like satin, then white throats netted with black, and deep crimson margins, and pure white with yellow throats and many other combinations of color and markings impossible to describe in detail in this limited space. CACTI IN THE GARDEN.

We present herewith an engraving from a photograph of a row of Echinopsis Mullerii blooming in the garden of Mrs. Theodosia B. Shepherd, the florist and seed grower, Ventura, Cal. Referring to this cactus Mrs. Shepherd writes:

"Echinopsis Mullerii is one of the most easily grown and satisfactory of the globose cactus. It is never troubled by insect pests and increases rapidly. Small plants bloom the third year, and medium sized and large ones bloom at intervals during the year, but their best blooming season is in the spring. One large plant will give twenty-five to fifty blooms a year, while a cluster of plants will often have as many as twenty-five flowers at one time. The flowers are most beautiful, a clear, satiny pink, the throat lined with silken stamens. Its frequent and exquisite blossoms make it a most satisfactory window plant."

CARNATION NOTES—WEST.

Cuttings.

If you have not already put in your main batch of carnation cuttings you should lose no time in getting them in. We have had all ours in sand a week or two except a few varieties of which we were not able to get enough cuttings, the first batch, especially seedlings. There are many good growers, however, who prefer a cutting taken in January or early February, and with a few varieties those are preferable, but only a few. Varieties that make a very large, soft plant are better propagated late because then you will have medium sized plants to lift in the fall and they will not wilt so badly. There are not many of these varieties, however, that will get too large by early July when you can begin to house them. If you take the cuttings now and they should for some reason not root, well, you will still have time to put in another batch before it is too late in the season.

Take only good cuttings from healthy plants and if possible take them from the flowering stems. I have told you before in these notes how to trim and stick the cuttings and how to care for them, and during this month and next you should not lose a cutting. Remember that the only secret there is in rooting carnation cuttings is to keep them from wilting without keeping them too dark and wet, and especially should you avoid having them wet over night. We clip the ends off the foliage because it helps them to keep fresh and we can stick more cuttings in a given space than when the grass is left long. The stub end is cut clean, but try whenever possible to have a heel at the end which will root more readily than a soft, pithy end will. Be sure the sand is clean and pack it down well before sticking the cuttings.

Young Plants.

Those cuttings you put in early last month should be rooted and ready to come out now. Different methods are adopted by different growers in caring for the young plants from the time they come out of the sand until planting out time, and with equal success, so I would not say that you must do so or so. The main thing is to keep them growing along slowly and topping them when it is necessary in order to produce a symmetrical plant. Some pot them right away and shift them when needed; others plant them in flats about two inches apart and leave them there until planting out time, and both raise good plants because both see to it that the plants do not become stunted before they are planted. We like to plant from pots whenever possible, especially if it happens to be a late batch of cuttings, because a plant from a pot will not suffer as quickly as a plant that has been dug up out of a box or bench and had many of its roots torn.

Just now we need every blooming plant we have and naturally we try to use as little room as we can with this young stock without crowding it. So we prepare a bench with about three inches of soil and plant them about two inches apart each way and here they remain until about six weeks before we want to plant them in the field, which would be about the middle of March. By that time we can spare a few benches that had blooming plants on them, and the young plants are potted into two and a half or three-inch pots, in which they are well established by the first of May. We use the same soil for these young plants that we do to plant in in the summer and fall on the benches, but we do not add any fertilizer of any kind, as we do not want a rapid growth, but rather a good strong root growth. Keep these in a temperature of about 50 degrees, as they will grow stockier and shorter-jointed in that temperature than if kept in a higher temperature, but do not go to the other extreme and keep them too cool.

New Arrivals.

Some of the new ones are beginning to arrive, and most of them are good, strong cuttings and well rooted. One or two lots were a little soft, but perhaps it is the fault of the variety being a rank grower and not of being grown too warm as is sometimes the case. You must watch these cuttings closely for a few days, more so in fact than you do those taken from your own cutting bench and planted right away. Remember that they have been in a totally dark place for two or three days, and the light is very hard on them until they become accustomed to it again. Shade them for a couple of days from 8 to 4 with paper even if the sun does not shine. You will of course know that all newly planted cuttings need shading on bright days for a week or so until the roots begin to take hold.

You should know by this time what new varieties you will want for next year, and in fact you should have ordered them before this, else you will be likely to get some pretty late cuttings, if any. It takes a large stock to supply the demand of a good variety these days and it is often the case that orders must be refused. That alone shows how badly we need improvements over existing varieties. Last year one grower that I know well was obliged to accept orders for many thousands of cuttings of a new variety in spite of the fact that he refused to promise to disseminate the variety this year. In standard varieties you are more likely to get them in good time if ordered now, but do not delay too long, else you may have to wait if the demand should be extra good for some of the varieties you may want. Order from some reliable firm who will supply you good stock at a fair price and remember that the worst thing you can do is to buy something because it is cheap. The best is always the cheapest.

A. F. J. BAUR.

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.

Treatment of New Arrivals.

The new introductions will soon begin to arrive, some having had a long journey in tight quarters. Rooted cuttings thus coming to hand are not by any means in the same condition as those taken from your own cutting bench and should be treated somewhat differently.

They have been taken from the sand and rolled in bundles, packed so as to exclude practically all air; then the efforts of our express companies to follow directions by placing a package bearing the words "Keep from Frost" on or near hot steam pipes, or one inscribed "Keep from Extreme Heat" in the coldest place to be found, is it any wonder that different conditions exist?

I am not finding any fault with the shipper, but my experience has been that there is a great tendency to softness, causing them to wilt more than those taken from the sand and potted at once. To overcome this condition one must be ready to receive our new steady boarders. Have the soil in the best possible mechanical condition, neither too wet nor dry. Open the packages at once on arrival, examine each bundle carefully, wetting those appearing dry. If any should show signs of frost, immerse in ice water and lay in a cool place for a short time. Put your best help at work potting and personally oversee the job, that there may be no delay in getting them into pots as soon as possible.

Stand in a shady bench in an even temperature of about 50 degrees, allowing no draught over them. Water at once, giving them a good supply, as it is assumed your judgment tells you to use clean dry pots. Syringe overhead as occasion will show until established. It is a good plan to use the ammonia copper carbonate solution at least twice during the syringing period.

Remember that these new introductions you receive represent an outlay of considerable money, and every one you lose raises the cost of the remainder, at the same time lessens the number to house, cut and propagate from next season.

Several new varieties of decided merit are to be sent out this year, and it is for our interest to perpetuate the good qualities shown by them in the hands of the originators. Every sort has its peculiar needs as to soil, fertilizers, temperature, etc. You must adopt the methods of the Yankee, who is noted as a proverbial quizzer. Write the originator and you may be sure he will furnish all the information desired. Every originator is only too glad to assist those who take an interest in the result of his long, patient work.

In previous notes on cuttings I neglected to say that while in sand we syringe overhead occasionally, using ammonia copper carbonate solution, and just previous to removing from sand they are watered with the same solution.

GEO. S. OSBORN.

CARNATION QUESTIONS.

Is Estelle a good first-class red carnation?

What is the best method to use in fighting thrips?

For fumigation would you prefer tobacco stems or tobacco dust?

Can cuttings become infested with thrips? No. 404.

Your first question is one that might be answered "yes" by one grower and "no" by another, and both would be honest in his answer. Our experience with Estelle has been that we cannot get as much money out of a bench of Estelle as we can out of a bench of Crane or Americia, and perhaps that is what you want to know. But the blooms will score higher than either of the above two varieties. The color is ideal and the blooms are large and on fine stems, and it is a good keeper.

The only fault that we have to find with it is that it is a rather poor grower, and it is hard to get a good sized plant by planting in time. With an extra early start, however, this could be largely overcome, and in fact with some growers it seems to thrive about as well as the average, and with those it is a good paying sort. My advice to you would be to try a limited number, say a hundred or two, and see how it does with you, and then you can see for yourself whether it will be wise to plant it in quantity or not. But always bear in mind that it is not a rapid grower, and start it early.

I think that fumigating will be found far more effective in fighting thrips than dusting with tobacco dust. The smoke will penetrate into the favorite places of thrips better than the dust, and in fact even the smoke will not reach them all. The two together will do more good than either one alone, because when a bud opens up into a bloom and Mr. Thrips is obliged to shift his abode into another bud, he will find his path covered with his most deadly poison, nicotine, whereas if you only smoke he can shift his dwelling place from one bud to another in between times, and when he is tucked away between the close laying petals of a bud you can never reach him with your tobacco smoke. You have to catch him when he is exposed to your attacks.

Yes, cuttings can become infested just as well as blooming plants. You are quickest to notice their presence in the blooms because their work comes to light as soon as the bud opens up, while the growth does not show the effects so quickly. They will usually be found in the buds when there are any, but they will not starve when there are no buds to feed on. A. F. J. Baur.

fall. Had he signed his name I could have written to him for more data, etc., to work from. A. F. J. Baur.

BURSTED CALYXES.

My White Cloud carnations bear many flowers with bursted calyxes. The calyx seems short and round and it bursts before the flower is fully open. Other carnations in same house are all right and all the plants are in fine condition.

I keep well ventilated, in fact ventilators have not been closed this season. Temperature of house is about 45 degrees night, sometimes 48 degrees. Days, just heat of sun. On damp days I fire a little. L. H. W.

You are keeping your carnation house too cool and I wonder that you do not have trouble with all your varieties bursting the calyx. We find that 50 degrees is just about right for White Cloud and if your soil is extra heavy they will stand 52 degrees without Carnation House of Mr. J. F. Ammman, Edwardsville, Ill.

CARNATION TROUBLES.

I send some leaves taken from my carnations, which are affected by some disease. Please tell me what it is and the remedy. J. J. C.

I am unable to tell much about J. J. Co.'s case for lack of data. The specimens he sent were all dried up and revealed nothing in the way of disease, and his letter does not state whether the plants were housed early or late, nor whether the trouble came on just lately or soon after planting. The specimens looked like you often find a few weeks after planting in your carnations in the fall—the lower foliage dies and turns yellow. Some varieties will nearly always do this to some extent, while others will come through the ordeal without losing a leaf.

We go over all our carnations about a month or six weeks after planting and clean off what dead foliage there may be and there is usually no more trouble along that line. J. J. C. may not have done this, and if he planted his carnations in the house late it is likely to be worse than it usually is earlier in the weakening the stems. They should have from 6 to 10 degrees more in daytime according to the weather. Try them at above temperatures and I think your trouble will disappear.

A. F. J. Baur.

ZONAL GERANIUMS.

L. H. W. asks, "What time should geraniums that were rooted in 2-inch pots in October be pinched back so as to have them in good bloom by May 1, and kept in a day temperature of 50 degrees and 45 degrees at night?"

I don't know where L. H. W. is doing business, but if he wants his bedding geraniums in flower by the first of May, it is three weeks earlier than we do here. And for flower gardening it is better to have plants just coming into flower than to have them exhausted from flowering. Perhaps, however, these plants are intended for sale at some public market where it is always desirable to have them early and with many blooms.

Our method is to shift these 2-inch pot plants into 3-inch just as soon after New Year's as we can get at it. Then about February 1 we give them a stand over and take the tops off all of them, and about 75 per cent will give us a cutting. Of those that would be cut down too low by getting a cutting we just pinch out the top. They have all February and March, and this year the half of April, to break and grow. After Easter we shift into 4-inch pots and from middle to end of May they are in flower and in a healthy, vigorous growing state.

To get them in flower two or three weeks earlier than we do, I would say pinch them at once and don't look for a cutting. Let them remain in the 2-inch pots until the middle of February and then shift into 3½ or 4-inch. You will save the shift from 2 to 3-inch and they should be in good order by May 1. If all our zonal geraniums sold the first week of May the latter method would do, but it's a month later before we put them out, and I like our method the best. William Scott.

SOUPERT ROSES—CAPSICUM.

"Subscriber" asks "How long does it take to force Soupert roses in flower for Easter? Will they not come into flower quicker than hybrid perpetuals, which take thirteen weeks, six weeks in 40 to 45 degrees and seven weeks in 58 to 60 degrees?"

Possibly "Subscriber" has been successful with forcing the H. P. roses in the time and temperature he quotes, which in my opinion would be just about right for plants lifted from the ground in November, and which when brought into the house after New Years would have no active roots. If they have been grown in pots the previous summer, ten weeks in the same temperature would be time enough.

But to the question. These Soupert roses have doubtless been lifted from the ground in November, potted and plunged in cold frame. A slight trimming back should be given them, just a shortening of the shoots and the very weak ones cut out. Yes, they will be in flower a week or two before the H. P. but give them eleven weeks; the longer they are in the 45 degree temperature the better.

The same subscriber asks for time for sowing and best treatment of Capsicum annuum to have it in good order for Christmas sales. I will confess my ignorance on the specific names of many of the peppers. If C. annuum is the very ornamental one that has been grown largely for the past three or four years and whose fruit is most ornamental, not only when colored red, but when some are white or yellow, and the plant never grows large, then I know the plant very well and grow it.

The seed is often sown too early. The middle of May is time to sow it, as the temperature of our houses then is warm. You will soon have plants in 2-inch pots. If planted out in the open ground by the first of July it will be early enough. It should be good, rich ground and within reach of the hose in case of a long dry spell. Lift and pot into 4 or 5-inch pots before there is any danger of frost and from then on keep in a light house where the night temperature is about 55 degrees. They lift quite easily and soon get established without losing a leaf. We tried growing them in pots under glass all summer and it was a failure.

HYDRANGEAS.

"L. A. G." says he received some hydrangeas (presumably Otaksa) from a distance during October. Although he does not say so, most likely they were lifted from the field. They "wilted some" and most of the leaves dropped off. He kept them shaded for a while and then put them on a bench in a carnation house, and now at the date he writes, December 28, they have made no start, although they have plenty of buds. He asks whether they should be kept quite damp or whether they need fertilizer.

If these plants were lifted from the field when they were growing fast and before any frost had checked their growth the leaves would wilt and drop off, but no harm would come from that. If when received they had been potted firmly and stood out of doors for a few weeks it would have been better than putting them into the carnation house. Two or three degrees of frost would ripen up their growth and prepare them better for forcing, but this is advice for another year.

Don't take off any buds and keep them just moderately moist. They will not want watering often until the roots are active. But as they send out leaves and the pots fill with roots, the hydrangea is an "habitual drinker" and must be often and copiously given water. If the buds are shriveled, don't attempt to force them for Easter; keep them cool and let them come along for later. If the buds are plump and fresh they must soon start growing. Spray the tops daily. A carnation house temperature (that is, 50 degrees at night) is plenty warm enough until the first of February. They need no fertilizer of any kind until within a month of their flowering time, or say early in March. And next year grow your own plants on your own place.

CALLA LILIES.

"D. F." sends the following: "Will you kindly answer the following in your paper, and oblige: Many of our callas rot off at the top of bulb. What is the cause and remedy? Should calla blossoms be cut or pulled out?"

In the first place, although commonly called a bulb, the calla is no bulb at all. It is a corm or thickened root. And in forty years' acquaintance with this stately old flower I have never seen or heard of these roots rotting. It is possible but hardly probable that "D. F." has kept this so-called bulb on the surface of the soil, as he would a true lily. What might occur then I don't know. The bulb should be two inches below the surface of the soil.

If they are in 5 or 6-inch pots I would advise him to stand them on a bench or bed, giving both the tops and pots plenty of space between them. Then fill in between the pots and two inches above the surface of pots with some half rotted short manure and give them plenty of water. They will grow considerably from now until next May and disturbing them is not desirable, so give them plenty of room. Never having seen the root of a calla diseased, I cannot recommend any remedy, but if you will follow the above suggestions with what are now healthy you will get a great lot of flowers. Remember, the calla is a tropical plant and needs a warm, light house. By all means cut your blooms and don't pull them.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

ASPARAGUS PLUMOSUS.

N. H. asks if this "taken out of a bed, divided and potted, is as good for replanting a bed as those grown right along from seed and planted out of 4-inch pots."

I would say decidedly not. It used to be done. I once tried it and my experience was that it was a long time in getting a start, and never made the vigorous plants that the seedlings did. It's not likely that N. H. is going to plant a new bed at this time of year. June would be a better month, and young 2-inch plants procured now and shifted on would by the month of June be fine stuff for the new bed, which should always be in the ground and have beneath it neither plank, tile nor anything that can keep the roots from Mother Earth.

NOTES OF A WAYFARER.

Next morning we found ourselves in the old town of Philadelphia, in time to catch a glimpse of that much talked of Flower Market, where each grower sells his own stock, and what he does not sell is left in the hands of the manager, Mr. Meehan, for disposal. If a clear brained hustling business man can dispose of the leavings to the satisfaction of the grower, we would judge Mr. Meehan to be in the right place. The room, which is a very large one, is most assuredly a model one for the purpose; good light, clean and airy. While we have heard considerable talk, pro and con, as to the probable outcome of the venture, we frankly state that so far as we can see it can be nothing else but a "howling success." Whether it was the general air of the place or what it was, we could not help but feel that any of the big wholesale growers' houses in Chicago could discount this market considerably when it came to quality and quantity of stock handled in a day. If I remember aright, about fifty growers are represented with stalls, but it seemed to us that one of the big western grower's cut of roses and carnations dumped in here would far exceed their busiest days at the market.

Our next call was at Robert Craig & Sons, Forty-ninth and Market. We were much surprised at the quantity of azaleas grown here; house after house of them in readiness to apply the magic touch to in order to push them into bloom at the time they are wanted. Crimson Rambler in pots the same. A large number of azaleas, cyclamen, ardisias and mixed pans of crotons, palms and Dracæna terminalis were gotten into tempting array for the Christmas shoppers. Rubbers, Areca lutescens, Bostons and crotons are grown in immense quantities. The method in growing areas was a new one to us. They lift up a small bunch of seedlings from the seed pan, anywhere from five to eight little plants in a clump; these they plant in a 4-inch pot and shift into larger ones as needed. They make handsome specimens well furnished with leaves by the time they reach a salable size, six to ten inches or larger.

Will was in a hurry to switch us off to the carnation range; we wondered why, but the moment we caught sight of the house of Adonis we understood. It was a grand sight. We saw more red carnations in that house than we had seen in any whole establishment during our trip. It was by far the best lot of plants on the place. It was right here we met Mr. Craig, Sr. The "old man" does not look the same as when we last saw him. He still shows the effects of his recent illness, but we hope he will continue to improve as the brighter days of spring return and the swallows to the northern home return.

Being driven over to W. K. Harris' establishment we were surprised to find such a large, well kept place. This was our first visit here, and without exaggerating at all we never saw a place that struck us with such signs of good management.

Here, as at Craig's, a general assortment of plants is grown. A house of gardenias is being tried: we shall watch with interest any reports concerning it. A large house of holly bushes, in pots, well berried, pyramidal form, anywhere from four to eight feet high, was the leading feature in Christmas plants. This struck us as being a good investment. Investment we must call it, as all the plants were imported from Europe. We left Philadelphia with the thought that there was still a good opening in or near Chicago for a first-class potplant establishment. Who'll venture it?

BUFFALO.

New Year's Trade.

Time was, some twenty-five years ago, when New Year's day was the floral day of the whole year. For many years it has been entirely different, and New Year's has been little more than any other day of mid-winter. This year, however, there was a crowd of social events that made it a busier time than for many New Year's days past. The annual charity ball that all society attends; every club in this city held open house; there were private dances, receptions, the coming out of some fair buds and even a wedding in high life. Altogether it was a day filled with festivities and all wanting more or less of our work and wares. And then, only once in a decade do we rejoice in such ideal weather—a few inches of snow on the ground, the sleigh bells jingling everywhere, bright sunshine all day and so little below the freezing point that it felt warm and balmy. Sleighing is nice fun in such weather, but when it's zero you have to sit awfully close together to keep from freezing, and then your toes and nose are likely to suffer. An English girl on a visit to Canada said she enjoyed a sleigh ride ever so much, but it was a pity it always came in such cold weather. So perhaps a most beautiful day made everybody good tempered and generous.

The demand for plants was not worth mentioning after the Christmas trade, yet there was a little. The business was cut flowers. Roses and violets were in great demand and good carnations found buyers freely. Prices have taken the usual drop, which they can well afford to take, but are yet high enough to be healthy all around.

Sweet Peas.

Sweet peas were quite a feature this season with several local men, W. J. Palmer & Son having a fine cut, and Louis H. Neubeck at his Corfu place has picked some twenty dozen every morning for several weeks past. These were sown in August on benches in five inches of soil and two single stems tied up to a string just as you would smilax, the strings being about nine inches apart each way. I have never grown them this way, but am inclined to think it a paying crop if you have something to succeed them after April.

Items.

Mr. C. F. Christensen had a grand pick of carnations for Christmas. He is about the first around here that has made a great success of that useful variety "Glacier." His soil or his skill grows Bradt, Crane and Marquis to perfection. His house of mignonette was also in splendid shape for Christmas trade, and so was a fine batch of Lilium Harrisii.

Charles Guenther, of Hamburg, sent in a splendid lot of Bridesmaid and Bride roses. I don't mean by this that he had been saving up a month's cut and sent them in for Christmas, but he manages to have a fine lot when they are worth most and when we all want them. He is a student and a rose grower and his success is not "good luck": it is knowledge and experience carefully applied, with lots of hard work.

Violets.

The Wise Bros., of East Aurora, have been sending in a very superior grade of carnations, but I don't envy them that as much as I do their "Imperial" double violets. These have been of great size and color and equal in every way to the finest of the Hudson River flowers. You may live to be ninety years old and think you are a past master on violet culture, having them beautiful and growing on November 1, and in two weeks the leaves are curled, the buds are wilted and you have the blues. In January they will pick up again and when they are worth very little you will have a fine crop. Such are the tribulations of many who think they know all about Viola odorata.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Business has fallen off a little since New Year's. The quantity of stuff coming in would seem to indicate that the growers are giving their plants a much needed rest. Prices held well until this week, when they fell, especially on roses. White flowers suitable for funeral work were scarce and brought good prices, much higher than colored flowers of the same grade.

The event of the week was the departure of Herman Schoenfeld for Harrisburg on the 4:20 a. m. train on Tuesday morning to be on hand bright and early for the opening of the State Legislature. He was loaded down with flowers—bunches, bouquets and designs, including a great horseshoe and a gavel for the speaker's desk. Before leaving Mr. Schoenfeld made an impression, as my Sharon Hill friend would say, on the rose and carnation markets and nearly carried the sweet pea market away, taking 1,500 of Edward Reid's best blooms with him—no small number for this wintry month.

The Wholesalers.

The wholesale commission merchants have been too busy to talk until this week when the let up in business activity made it possible to get their ideas into shape regarding what was done during the holidays. William J. Baker was better satisfied than ever before with the results obtained. He said that business had been good at Christmas and since, which is saying a good deal for Mr. Baker. He deplores the holding back of flowers, which makes so much trouble, both with the buyers and consignors, still he thinks the evil grows less year by year.

Eugene Bernheimer is greatly encouraged by the increase in the volume of his business. A letter from one of his largest growers, dated December 31, was very gratifying. It said that the grower was that day closing the most prosperous year of his business and thanked Mr. Bernheimer for disposing of the large cut of flowers at such good prices. Such expression of feeling is very encouraging to the commission man, doing much to establish that mutual confidence so necessary to pleasant business relations.

Geo. M. Moss is greatly pleased with his holiday results. He spoke of the splendid demand for all kinds of flowers, commenting especially on the call for white flowers experienced this week.

Leo Niessen was much gratified with the increase in business of 50 per cent over last year. He handled an immense stock of fine Beauties. His Liberties and bouvardias were especially choice. All orders were filled on time with scarcely a complaint, and at the close of Christmas day there was hardly $200 worth of stock left on the place. This is very little when the enormous quantity of stock handled is considered. Mignonette was better than formerly. Carnations were very fine, but alas, many were kept too long. Mr. Niessen said his rose growers had implicitly followed his directions at the time of shipping their flowers and he believed they had obtained the very best results thereby.

Samuel S. Pennock sold 25,000 lily of the valley at Christmas. He was pleased with his holiday business in every way, excepting that part which related to the flowers held too long. He thinks that the growers who hold back their stock do themselves and their commission man great injury. Often their flowers look well when packed in the box, but when they reach the city, and later the buyer, they show unmistakable signs of sleepiness, making them entirely unfit for use. Too much stress cannot be laid on this point, large sums being lost this year through holding. Mr. Pennock fared well with the express companies. He experienced a good demand for violets and handled many fine orchids. He thought that the market took more kindly to the flowers that advanced but slightly than to those that doubled their price for the holidays.

Edward Reid was much pleased with both local and shipping business. He had large consignments of fine sweet peas. His roses and carnations were of excellent quality. A letter received from a city in Georgia commended highly a shipment of carnations made December 8 and said that day, December 15, some of these carnations were in perfect condition. Mr. Reid believes these results are due to the care with which his growers carry out his directions in regard to time for picking these flowers, and because he never uses an ice box for carnations. They are always kept in a cooling room.

Notes.

There was a large representative club meeting Tuesday evening and the remarks by Messrs. Dailledouze and Thompson, who were visitors, were appreciated. There was an unusually fine exhibition of carnations, among the many choice varieties displayed being Adonis, Pres. McKinley, Fragrance, Queen, Enchantress, Mrs. Nelson Craig and others.

Herman Schoenfeld has removed temporarily to the west side of Seventeenth street. He will return later to a new store near his old site on the east side.

Adolph Farenwald is sending some very fine Liberty roses to Leo Niessen.

Samuel S. Pennock is receiving choice Brides and Maids from W. A. Leonard.

Henry Eichholz, of Waynesboro, Pa., has joined the Florists' Club of this city. He made a fine exhibit of carnations on Tuesday night. The rooted cuttings from his stock will be handled by Leo Niessen.

M. Rice & Co. report a splendid holiday business.

Edwin Lonsdale did exceptionally well with his Lorraine begonias. A large number was grown and flowered in 3-inch pots. They were made up in fancy baskets of growing plants, or made up into pans. Mr. Lonsdale says it is surprising how fine a plant can be grown in this small sized pot.

Leo Niessen is receiving fine daffodils from Carl Jurgens, of Newport, R. I., and not from the South as stated last week.

BOSTON.

Quiet, but very fair for the time of year. If business were good material would be scarce, but there is enough for all demands, violets and yellow jonquils probably running scarcest. Of the former only the single variety is yet coming at all; the only double one I have seen being shown as a curiosity by W. W. Tailby. Stevia is pretty well gone and no one bringing it in except Kidder Brothers, who have had a large amount of extra good quality, which is holding out remarkably well.

New Year's day has never seemed to affect our business enough to amount to anything until this year, when a marked increase was felt.

J. Walsh & Son.

This firm started in quite a small way in Malden some seven or eight years ago but has made a very rapid and very substantial growth, which is just what could be expected by those who have the honor of an acquaintance with the members of the firm. As they recently moved into a new store specially built for their business, I took a flying trip thereto and found it a model for suburban business, and indeed very few Boston stores surpass it. It is beautifully situated in just the right place to cater to the best trade in their city, which is of a highly aristocratic class.

Two large, elegant show windows, large room, elegant fixtures and a jewel of a conservatory in the rear with all modern equipments, completes the ground floor, with nothing above, and a fine large cellar beneath. We need not bother to wish them success. It is too late.

Among the dangerous looking newcomers to the business for 1903 is Backer & Co., of Billerica, who have been sending in a good cut of fine carnations right along and have faith enough in their abilities so that they have decided to add 225x30 feet to the plant. This will be of iron construction throughout and up to the twenty-first century in every way.

The seven greenhouses of F. W. Fletcher, Auburndale, were frozen solid, December 27, owing to lack of sufficient fuel. This is the third serious loss Mr. Fletcher has sustained within two years but he takes his latest loss philosophically, only remarking that it "is a hard blow for my creditors." He has become, however, a determined opponent of the governmental policy that not only protects but encourages the formation of monopolies to rob the public.

J. S. MANTER.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Trade is quiet, as to be expected at the season, and the supply, though not great, is sufficient to meet demands except for a slight shortage in roses. The quality shows some improvement as the result of the more seasonable weather. Prices have eased some from our last quotations, but they are well held at our prices of this week. Were the supply much larger the demand would be too light to keep prices at present level. On the whole the market is in a very satisfactory condition for the season. As is well known, there is always a dull two weeks after the holidays, and if the supply does not increase materially for another week it will be just as well.

Various Items.

Mr. C. M. Dickinson, manager of E. H. Hunt's, is confined to his home by illness.

On New Year's day Oscar Kreitling, the West 12th St. florist, was fatally shot by his brother-in-law. The news of the tragedy was a great shock to his many friends in the trade. He was laid at rest on Sunday.

The new cut flower market was opened by the Flower Growers' Co. last Tuesday. The company has a space 85 by 90 feet on the second floor of the building at the northeast corner of Wabash Ave. and Randolph St. Though not yet fully fitted up, selling began Tuesday morning, stands being occupied on the opening day by F. R. Hills, Sinner Bros., Mrs. A. M. Schafer, Matt Everett, Mrs. F. Beu, Mrs. Foote, B. Eldridge and H. W. Lyons. On Wednesday J. A. Swanson and A. B. Everett were stand holders. The directors of the company are F. R. Hills, E. Buettner, John Sinner, Mrs.

A. M. Schafer and Frank Beu. A ball will be given in the market next Tuesday evening, Jan. 13, and all in the trade are invited.

Henry Miller, McHenry, Ill., has had an accident to his boiler that will practically close his establishment for the rest of the season.

There are rumors afloat to the effect that a number of growers are in a bad way for coal, and that some of them may have to shut down if the situation is not soon relieved.

Chas. Siegk is back in Chicago, the plans for his store in Joliet having fallen through.

Jos. Foerster was a member of the bowling team that made the new western record of 1101 by a five man team. This is within two pins of the world's record. His average in 30 games is 199.

NEW YORK.

Trade Conditions.

The New Year opened with weather good enough for May. Not a cloud in the sky and the air as mild and sweet as if it were the "first breath of spring." Seems as though the elements were not in league with the coal barons, and that the climatic powers that be, had the anxious florist in view when the temperature for December and early January was under consideration. The whole week has been mild, and business fairly encouraging in all the branches of the trade.

Some of the retailers are rushed with dinners and weddings, and a few elaborate decorations have already materialized. Prices for cut flowers of all kinds have gradually depreciated since the holidays and at this writing normal values prevail.

The Coal Situation.

With the advent of colder weather, which cannot be long delayed, will come the most serious question of the year, the closing of many greenhouses because of the impossibility of obtaining coal. Even now the price is prohibitive and many are reducing the outlay by shutting off a portion of their plants and using only the houses absolutely necessary. There seems to be no salvation from serious losses for a multitude of growers. The supply of coal is short and will certainly continue so until the summer. If anything can be done to avert this calamity to the trade there is not a moment to be lost. Practical and immediate suggestions and efforts are absolutely necessary.

Even the largest growers are beginnine to feel the strain. C. W. Ward and Jno. H. Taylor have each closed several houses during the past week and there are others who are moving heaven and earth to get the supplies needed in time for the inevitable.

Items.

The preparations for the great carnation convention in February go steadily on. Mr. Ward and several members of the committee met on Saturday last and arranged and completed many plans that insure its success. It will be the convention if all the schemes to make it so materialize.

Mr. Ward reports many orders for his new book daily. It will be sent out early in February and promises to be of great value to carnationists. The last chapter is in the hands of the printer.

Next Monday evening the first regular meeting of the New York Florists' Club for 1903 will be held at 128 E. Twenty-eighth street, the club's temporary quarters. President Sherman's valedictory, installation of new officers, and many considerations of importance, with some exhibits and special features by the entertainment committee, will make it a gala night.

The club's sixteenth annual dinner, as already recorded, comes on Saturday evening, January 31, at the St. Denis hotel. Tickets are $5 and the menu and "feast of reason" will be above the average. A very large attendance is assured.

The visit of Mr. Hartshorne, of the Chicago Carnation Co., is kept in memory regularly at Walter Sheridan's, where some of the tip top western carnations may be found.

Geo. C. Perkins, of Newark, called on us last week before his trip to Southern California, where the firm of Jackson & Perkins intends to go into hardy rose culture on an elaborate scale. Two immense propagating houses will be built and the yearly output anticipated as early as 1904 is over a million bushes.

The Manhattan Supply Co., of New York City, secured a lot at the corner of Center, Duane and New Elm streets, close to Brooklyn bridge, which will add greatly to the facilities.

Theo. Hauschild, with C. H. Brown, of 400 Columbus avenue, has a boy named Theodore Roosevelt that proves "there's something ($10) in a name." Last week, attracted by his strenuousness, or beauty, a stranger in a street car, after reflection took a $10 bill from his roll, placed it in the baby's lap and weepingly left the car and the baby and the $10. So much for Christmas sentiment, and if such lightning hits a florist's baby this season so much more credit to the lightning.

Wednesday of this week the Chatham wholesalers commence shipping their stock to the market in vans, arriving at 7 a. m. The letter of Mr. Hillman in your last issue is already bearing fruit. The sentiment against the express companies is bitter and universal. As may be expected, it is rumored the express people have already made advances to the shippers looking to a recurrence to the rates that formerly prevailed.

The DeForest range of greenhouses at Summit has been closed for the winter.

Otto Nasher, who has been with Aug. Rolker & Sons as book-keeper for many years, died of appendicitis at the Presbyterian hospital last Monday, aged 42.

McNeice reports a demand from out of town florists for gardenias, camellias and orange blossoms, several shipments having been made since Christmas to Utica and Buffalo.

Hitchings & Co. have the contract for the range of houses to be built at S. Elizabeth, by the Penn. R. R. Co.

Mrs. John P. Cleary was prostrated Sunday by the death of her brother, Father Creedon, chaplain of Sing Sing prison and pastor of the village church of Ossining. The interment was at Calvary cemetery, L. I. City, on Tuesday. Father Creedon was a man of exceptional ability. The sympathy of the trade is extended to Mr. Cleary and his bereaved wife.

The Flatbush boys are making great preparations for their annual "Prize" night, which comes on Thursday, January 15, and to which all interested florist bowlers are invited. Everyone is expected to contribute a parcel with a value of from $1 upwards concealed within, and the choosing of the winners comes in the order of success, the highest score entitling the winner to "first choice" and so on to the "booby prize," which is apt to be the best of the collection.

The Carnation Convention.

The Brooklyn Horticultural Society held its meeting at the German.a Club rooms Monday evening, and with the largest attendance of the season, over thirty members being present. Mr. Albert M. Herr, secretary of the American Carnation Society was present and furthered the interests of the society by his instructions and counsel. Mr. C. W. Ward, the president, was in the chair. Mr. J. V. Phillips, chairman of the membership committee, reported several additions to the list, with prospects encouraging. Mr. Weeber, chairman of the ways and means committee, and Mr. Langjahr, chairman of the entertainment committee, both reported satisfactory progress.

Manager Plumb, of the exhibition committee, reported arrangements about completed in all departments under his charge and general evidence was manifest of such perfect harmony and finish to all projects as to already assure the Carnation Society of a "royal welcome." Letters were read from Mr. H. A. Dreer and Mr. W. Siebrecht concerning exhibits and a motion to put Manager Plumb in charge of the trade display was unanimously approved. Mr. Phillips will preside as chief of the decorating committee, which insures artistic and thorough work.

Discussions as to the toastmaster and the speakers developed the fact that some of the leading orators of the city will be present, and that the banquet will be one of the most elaborate ever given in Brooklyn. Many prominent citizens will be there, and an attendance of less than 400 is not likely; in fact I will not be surprised to see more than that number present.

Arrangements will be made for the entertainment of visiting ladies, which doubtless will include a theater party and luncheon. Mr. Herr estimated an attendance of 200 within a 100-mile radius of New York City, a dozen from Canada, 75 from New England, 75 between New York and Chicago and 50 from west of the windy city. Special rates will be doubtless secured from all railroads as usual.

Mr. Langjahr reported the offer of an elegant cut glass ornament from Lozier and a silver cup from Strauss to be added to the list of prizes, and votes of thanks were tendered the generous donors. The next meeting will be held on Monday evening, January 19, at which time it is expected every arrangement for the convention will be completed.

Chas. W. Jacob & Allison, the cape flower and raffia importers, have removed to their new offices, 18 Cedar street.

J. Austin Shaw.

BALTIMORE.

The general tone of the cut flower market is buoyant, the only drawback being the scarcity of some kinds of needed material. It is said that the last was a week of more generally diffused good business than is often found in any single week, the great holidays alone excepted. There were several elaborate weddings, numerous receptions, lunches and other social entertainments, and two or three large funerals at which the floral offerings were numerous and handsome. A new practice prevailing here—it may be provincial—which is not unlikely to have some influence on the beautiful and appropriate, even if sometimes overdone, custom of sending flowers as tributes of respect and admiration for the dead, is the publishing in the daily papers of the names of the contributors and descriptions of the flowers. This is a new departure in this section. The day of "designs" for funeral occasions seems to have departed. The gates ajar and flying doves have practically been wholly superseded by wreaths of rose bunches, and the stiff creations, save occasionally a cross, are seldom seen where a higher taste prevails.

We have had variable weather for the past week—not cold, but cloudy and raw—with a tremendous rain Friday. Today, January 5, is threatening and dull. The fuel problem continues unsolved and many florists have limited supplies and are living from hand to mouth after a very disagreeable and perplexing fashion.

The demand for finer qualities of roses is considerably in excess of the supply, and white and red carnations continue scarce.

Frederick C. Bauer, of Govanstown, met with a severe accident, being thrown from his wagon, which was upset and destroyed by contact with a frog in the railway track, his horse also being injured, though not severely.

Messrs. Madsen and Anderson, also of Govanstown, and neighboring but not rival growers, continue to send in fine American Beauties of excellent color and healthy foliage. In this class they are the leaders here. R.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The florists have enjoyed a very busy week. The demand for flowers for New Year's was very good, in fact I believe better than for many a year. Large quantities of carnations arrived last week, and the market was in a peculiar condition; only the best, large, fancy flowers seemed to sell at fair prices, while the medium and poor grades moved out slowly, at prices which at times were very low.

The supply of Maids and Brides is limited, but those which are received are exceptionally fine. Beauties still bring good prices, almost Christmas prices for the better grades. The supply is equal to the demand. Liberties and Meteors are off crop. Valley finds a brisk demand and the quality is good.

Roman hyacinths are scarce, narcissus is a glut. Lilies are being received in larger amounts and bring very good prices. Mignonette, pansies, sweet peas and tulips are more plentiful, and find a ready sale. Freezias and single daffodils are beginning to make their appearance. In greens, Sprengeri is the only stock that is scarce.

Notes.

A very heavy fog prevailed in this city on New Year's day, and resulted in almost a complete tie-up in traffic, the railroads suffering most. The mantle covered an area of twenty-five miles. Every local florist suffered inconvenience and loss by delayed deliveries on that day. Violets and other stock from the east were ordered to arrive in the morning, for orders for noonday luncheons, etc. The shipments arrived late in the afternoon, causing disappointment to customers and loss to the florists. Such delays are very frequent and the fault lies with the express companies here.

This matter of delayed shipments seems to be of sufficient importance to call for concerted action among the trade everywhere. The recent rise of rate on cut flowers to one and one-half times merchandise rate begins to look like extortion, when cut flower shipments receive the attention of only ordinary merchandise shipments. Can it not be made part of the work of the Society of American Florists or of local associations to aid their members in collecting claims for stock refused on account of delay, when such delay is due to the carelessness and negligence of the express companies? The vexations of pressing a claim frightens many an individual. A systematic and persistent pressing of every claim to which a florist is entitled would probably cause some change in the attention given to cut flowers by express companies. Something should be done; it is a matter that vitally affects the whole trade and united action should certainly be taken at once.

Considerable excitement was caused among the employes at Randolph & McClements' the other afternoon. On opening a case of southern smilax a live gray squirrel suddenly emerged. Mr. Squirrel made his debut with a leap from the case of smilax, which caused the ladies present to make a hasty exit; the display of silk clocks and lingerie caused blushes and embarrassment to the modest florists.

J. B. Murdoch & Co. are cutting some good Maids and Brides from their new range at Cannonsburg.

J. J. Joliff, of Belle Vernon, is the proud father of a 10-pound baby boy. Mrs. Joliff and son are doing well.

Tom Ulam was very busy with funeral work last Thursday; one design for which he received $100 was a harp.

In California the new year was inaugurated with a tournament of roses, but let us not be jealous. By next June we ought to be able to do some rose tournamenting ourselves.

Visitor:—Robt. Craig, of Philadelphia, Pa. Hoo-Hoo.

CROMWELL, CONN.

New Year's has come and with it the usual increased demand, but no such a call as before Christmas. The fine weather preceding helped matters out wonderfully and we trust that we may always be favored with such weather at the holidays.

Cow Manure.

One of the most serious problems of the greenhouse business here is nearing a solution and we are trusting that we may never again be confronted with such a serious problem as we have had to face the past few years. Despite the fact that Cromwell is largely a farming town there is very little cow manure to be had at any price and our experience has shown us that it is an absolute necessity. Horse manure has its uses, but in the growing of roses especially it can never replace cow manure.

Plans for a stable to hold beef stock are under consideration and this time next year will probably find our compost being enriched by the droppings of at least a score of steers which will be fatted for beef. This number will be increased to at least one hundred as soon as possible and we trust that this will solve the problem. The present price of beef will at least partially make it a paying venture aside from the value of the manure.

Tobacco Stems.

The question of fumigation for aphis is also one that has led to numerous experiments. We have for years used tobacco stems but this method is proving very unsatisfactory. Formerly we could buy stems that would do the work but today conditions are very different. We have used stems in two ways, aside from putting them on the pipes, burning them and steaming them; but today the tobacco stems of commerce are of little more value for fumigating purposes than so much hay. Whether the dealers extract tobacco extract from them and rob them of whatever value they possess or not we do not know, but the fact remains that they are valueless and other methods must be found. Aphis punk is being tried and the expense is the only thing against it, but even with the extra cost, if it will do the work it will replace stems which fail to produce results.

Valley Pips.

A large shipment of lily of the valley pips was received recently which proved very unsatisfactory and the whole hundred thousand were returned. There is something wrong with the dealer when he fails to deliver to the buyer first-class pips when such are ordered a year in advance and he is given to understand that the best produced in Germany is none too good and the extra price is paid to insure the receipt of such high-grade stock. In this case the pips were to cost ten marks more than the usual quality on the other side and when received they proved to be at least no better than the ordinary if not inferior to them. Something certainly is radically wrong.

Among the visitors this past week are J. A. Budlong and son of Providence, R. I. W. R. PIERSON.

CLEVELAND.

The annual banquet of the Florists' Club was held last Monday evening, about fifty members being in attendance. The first part of the evening was spent in bowling and card playing, in which all joined with a vim and vigor that predicts for the club a growth that has never been known before. It also showed that the members can get together in a brotherly spirit and enjoy themselves. If the same spirit could be aroused in the members outside of the club rooms and away from the banquet table there would be none of that throat cutting that is shown now, and one of the most serious problems that we have to contend with, and one that is occupying the minds of the craft in general; namely, how to raise the price of our produce to compare with the increased cost of production, would be solved. Here is where the florists in general are lacking that brotherly spirit of "live and let live" or a willingness to see each other prosper and rejoice in each other's prosperity. If there were more of this spirit shown and less of the animosity that we have now, there would be less throat cutting and no back biting, as we have at present. Of course my sphere of observation is limited, being confined to Cleveland and its immediate vicinity in these remarks.

We sat down to the banquet table at about 10 o'clock and from that time until midnight the members present spent their energies in satisfying the inner man and listening to the flow of wit, mirth and song that is ever present when the members get together on an occasion of this kind. In the absence of our honored president, Mr. Gordon Gray, who was detained for some unknown reason, one of our ex-presidents, Mr. Adam Graham, was chosen as toastmaster, much to the gratification of all present. He called on several for short talks on what was uppermost in their minds. All responded, rejoicing in the fact that so many were present and that the club was in such a prosperous condition, but they would all revert to the original proposition; namely, how to combat the high price of coal, glass and iron. Some suggested petitioning our congressmen for the removal of the tariff on these articles, which has been done with a cordial assurance of assistance from the one and an evasive answer from the other, until finally our toastmaster said he thought we would have to submit in regard to iron and glass, but thought we might beat out on the coal barons by each and every florist discovering a coal mine on his own premises.

Holiday business in general was extra good, there being a good demand for all stock. I think the demand for cut flowers this year was rather in excess of last season, although good plants sold well—poinsettias, azaleas and ardisias in the lead, followed by cyclamens, Lorraine begonias, primroses and Roman hyacinths in pots and pans. Prices ruled a little higher this year. Palms, rubbers and Boston ferns sold well the week before Christmas, and with the mild weather we had up to Christmas eve there was no trouble in delivering, but very little stock getting frozen.

The Market.

Stock of all kinds has been short since Christmas, and anything that is at all good is quickly picked up. A little second and third grade is seen after the morning's business is over, but it is of the kind which is hard to sell at any price. And the worst of it all is, there is no prospect for an immediate change for the better. We need more good stock to fill all of our orders, but we simply cannot get it.

Trade after Christmas was very good, in fact better than was expected. New Year's business did not amount to a great deal, nevertheless everything reasonably good was sold out and at Christmas prices. In many cases the figures averaged higher. Considering that business was a trifle quiet, it was perhaps a good thing that stock was scarce. Had there been a good supply there is no telling what might have happened.

Trade is now taking its usual post-holiday rest, which is to be expected. There are, though, quite a few decorations on for this week, and many flowers will be used. Julius Baer had one for the 6th which was the largest and most elaborate seen in this city for some time. T. W. Hardesty & Co. were busy with a large one on Monday. There is also considerable funeral work, which helps to move the seconds and thirds, with which, as a rule, this market is well supplied.

Prices on all kinds of stock have dropped somewhat and are now just a trifle higher than they were before the holidays. Good stock being scarce, it is held stiff at quoted figures.

Harrisii lilies are very popular of late and sell well. Bulbous stock is moving somewhat better. Violets are very scarce. The few that are grown around here are not blooming well, and we depend upon those shipped in for main supply.

Orchids are in better demand this winter than ever before. A great number of them are being handled and more could be used.

Both Asparagus Sprengeri and plumosus are getting scarce. There seems to be plenty of smilax. Asparagus Sprengeri is daily becoming more popular and great quantities are being used. Several growers are planting considerable of it, and within another year the demand will be well taken care of.

Notes.

The regular monthly meeting of the florists' society will be held Saturday evening, January 10, in the club rooms over the Jabez Elliott flower market.

Dick Witterstaetter reports being well pleased with Christmas trade. He had a large cut of his high-grade fancy carnations, and they brought a good price.

C. J. Ohmer.

KANSAS CITY.

Dark weather for a considerable time preceding Christmas threatened a shortage of stock, but there was enough to go around, with a volume of sales amounting to about 25 per cent more than last year. Christmas eve the bottom dropped out of the thermometer and zero weather made a great amount of extra work wrapping plants. Lorraines and azaleas easily took the lead in plants and a large number were disposed of. Poinsettias were not much in evidence. All kinds of greens sold well and all dealers were entirely cleaned out. The town was flooded with Christmas trees; but very few were left.

Rock kept twenty people busy all night December 23 and 24, getting out orders. He handled a fine lot of azaleas, Lorraines and poinsettias.

Newell had a nice thing in an order for twenty-five boxes from one man at $5 per. The gentleman who bought these boxes distributed them to friends living in his own neighborhood.

This was Lawrence Schwager's first Christmas, but he succeeded in doing his share of the business. He had a particularly large trade in trees and greens.

Miss Dalley reported a good business. She was badly handicapped by her head clerk being laid up just at the time he was most needed.

Barbe was in just right with a big crop of carnations, azaleas, Lorraines and other plants.

The New Year's season was a surprise to all, and the leading expression concerning it was, "I never thought it." Prices held well up to the week before, and as there had been sunshine, stock was plentiful and of good quality. I hope it is an indication for the coming year.

Tom Cane, clerk for Lawrence Schwager, is laid up with a sprained ankle. In his haste to wait on an early morning customer he slipped and fell. Haste is always commendable, but the quality should be exercised with discretion by one not habitually used to it.

John M. Vesey.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

New Year's day trade was quite a surprise to some of the florists, and most of them report business away ahead of last year. The old custom of keeping open house was revived this year and a great many cut flowers were used to decorate the tables and parlors. Some of the downtown florists report that they were caught short of stock, not thinking that the day would bring much demand, and were very much surprised at the call for cut stuff. The weather was delightful, which was very enjoyable to all, making deliveries pleasant and easy of accomplishment.

Referring to Christmas trade, which is still the talk among the trade when they meet, one feature was the increasing demand for plants, both flowering and foliage. Florists who make a specialty of plants and have greenhouses attached to their stores had a surprisingly large demand for this stock. F. C. Weber, Geo. Waldbart, Mrs. Ayers, Theo. Miller and Mary Ostertag, who have stores of this kind, report the best Christmas trade in plants in years. C. Young & Sons Co. and Ellison & Tesson, who also handled a large number of plants, report a great sale on Christmas.

As to prices on cut flowers at wholesale this year, the growers will have a big surprise when they receive their return checks from the commission men. Much of the stock was of fine quality and very little pickled stuff came in. No doubt the growers have learned a lesson from past experience.

Trade since New Year's has been very quiet; still prices have been kept up, as stock has been scarce. The wholesalers say that these prices will be kept up until stock becomes more plentiful. The past week quite a lot of funeral work, which almost filled a car of the special train, was sent to Jefferson City to the funeral of Mrs. Dockery, wife of Gov. Dockery of Missouri. There are a few large wedding and reception decorations on tap for the latter part of this month, which will use up a lot of choice stock of all kinds.

Notes.

W. E. Jordon and wife left last week for Omaha, Neb., to attend the funeral of their brother-in-law, J. J. Dickey, superintendent of the Western Union Telegraph Co. Mr. Dickey was son-in-law of the late J. M. Jordan, and at one time a stockholder in the old Jordan Floral Co.

The club meeting this week should have taken place at Belleville, but owing to Mayor Halstedt's being too busy with municipal matters to properly entertain the members, he recalled his invitation until some time later, so the meeting takes place this week with the same programme at our regular meeting hall.

J. B. Hadkinson, of Omaha, Neb., has been appointed head gardener at the World's Fair grounds.

Ellison & Tesson have closed their down town store at Seventh and Locust, and hereafter will transact all business at their Grand avenue store.

Charlie Connon, late with Ellison & Tesson, is looking for a location downtown to open a retail store.

EXPRESS RATES.

The proper way to secure consideration from the express companies is to have a committee confer with the traffic managers of the various companies and induce one or more of them to bring the matter up for further consideration at the next meeting of the Traffic Managers' Association, which holds meetings from time to time in New York City.

And the only argument that will be effective is evidence that the companies will lose more than they will gain by the increase in rate.

As Mr. Patrick O'Mara, of New York, acquired thorough familiarity with the methods of the Traffic Managers' Association at the time the S. A. F. committee obtained the special rate on plants, he would certainly be the best equipped man to head such a committee.

It seems to us, by the way, that the S. A. F. is continually losing opportunities to be of real practical value to the trade. The officers or executive committee should have already acted in this matter. Certainly nothing could be more important, as it touches every member of the craft.

And by the way, what has become of the committee on the coal situation? Has it done anything or said anything? If so we haven't heard of it.

There is something in the S. A. F. that needs attention. There is too much of a tendency to shut off anything that promises to make work and to pigeon hole matters of most vital importance. There seems to be a lack of faith in the value of effort.

The project of a thorough revision of plant names and publication of synonyms was abandoned because some one thought the expense would be too great It seems to us that the most important function of the society is to tackle just such problems that it is impossible for the individual to deal with.

The plan of securing better rates on plants from the express companies was being abandoned at one of the executive committee meetings, when the writer of this ventured to suggest that there were ways of accomplishing the result. The members listened indulgently, and with the air of doing it to save their valuable time, appointed the suggestor chairman of a new committee. And much against his inclination he was obliged to take the matter up or see it fail, though others more vitally interested in the subject could have acted just as well. Fortunately, Mr. O'Mara was also appointed on the committee and did the major share of the work.

This is a good season of the year for the officers of the society to turn over a new leaf and get action on some of the very important matters demanding immediate attention.

The Florists' Manual, by Wm. Scott, is for use every day in the year.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

President Burton has appointed Messrs. Geo. C. Watson, Philadelphia, and R. F. Tesson, St. Louis, members of the executive board, to serve for a term of three years, beginning January 1, 1903. Wm. J. Stewart, Secretary.

It is proposed to form the "Carnation League of America" to perpetuate the memory of the late President McKinley. The idea originated with Mr. Lewis G. Reynolds, a business man of Dayton, Ohio. He proposes that on September 14 each year every member of the league shall wear a pink carnation. He expects the league to become as prominent as the "Primrose League" of England.

According to reports in the daily papers a number of physicians in Paris are prescribing roses for the maladies of some of their patients. The scent of roses is said to strengthen the nerves and drive away headaches. The color, especially that of American Beauty roses, is said to be beneficial also, and the sweeter a rose the greater its medicinal properties.

The Week opens with prices declining and the demand light. Only the very best command fancy values, and the supply of these is below expectations. Queen of Edgely has been off crop since Christmas. The usual two weeks of dullness are expected. Quality and quantity are both below the average.

On Wednesday the violet market was glutted and stock sold as low as 30 cents per 100 for the poorest, a few of the very best reaching $1.50. Carnation prices were cut to almost one-half of Monday's rates. Roses held strong, with a limited supply. Coal is now $15 a ton and hard to get at that.

The market has eased considerable since the holidays. There was quite a slump in carnations, especially colored stock. White is selling well. Roses are holding up well, and prices remain firm, especially in light colors. Violets are more plentiful. Trade in general is fair, but demand is principally for funeral work.

There is still a large demand for American Beauties and prices hold up well. In other roses Brides, Maids and Meteors are leaders, with quality excellent. In carnations the poorer grades are down to 2 cents, with 3 and 4 cents for selects and extras of the fancier sorts bring as high as 7 cents. There has been considerable call for cattleyas and cypripediums. In callas we often feel a shortage. Harrisii are coming in more freely. All stock is being well cleaned up. Sweet peas are showing up a little heavier than in former years. DILGER.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

The Xmas trade in this city was one of the heaviest on record and every one seems to have had his share. Prices ruled about the same as other years, the greatest demand being for the higher grades. There seemed to be more money to spend on flowers, and anything of real merit was bought eagerly. The supply of blooming plants was hardly up to the demand, and nothing nice was left over. Two of our leading retailers were almost sold out of plants by the 23rd. Lorraines, cyclamen and poinsettias were the leaders. The weather was against the growers here, as elsewhere. There were not three bright days in at least two weeks previous to Xmas, and with the usual demand trebled, it made the growers hustle to keep their promises. There was very little pickling, and consequently there is less kicking about poor stuff than usual. Looks as though our growers are learning a few things.

On January 13 the State Society holds its annual meeting and in connection there will be an exhibition of flowers and plants. There are to be awarded a silver and bronze medal for a novelty of American production not yet in commerce. Only Indiana members to compete. Officers will be elected at this meeting and a full attendance is requested as much important business is to come before the society. A. B.

Messrs. M. Rice & Co., the florists' supply dealers, Philadelphia, send us a very handsome calendar for 1903. It has four sheets and on each appears an artistic colored portrait of a charming maiden. The calendar for three months of the year appears below the portrait on each sheet, while the business card of the firm is printed in the upper corner on a ribbon, each sheet having a different colored ribbon. It is certainly a very attractive calendar.

INSURANCE—FUMIGATION.

Replying to the inquiry of G. H. there is no florists' mutual fire insurance company. One was organized a few years ago, but it met with so little support that it wound up its affairs after a short experience. There are regular companies that take risks on greenhouses and any general insurance agency can tell you which companies take such risks.

Use tobacco dust on the plants infested with the small worms. Their appearance might have been prevented by regular fumigation, which would discourage the presence of the miller that lays the eggs from which the worms are hatched. The purpose of fumigation is to prevent the appearance of insect pests and not to kill them after they appear.

In view of the amount of matter that has been published regarding the necessity of regular fumigation with tobacco as a preventive, rather than a remedial measure, it is surprising how many inquire for remedies for troubles that could have been prevented had this simple matter been regularly attended to. The use of tobacco in some form regularly and persistently as a preventive measure is just as important as maintaining a proper temperature or giving the right amount of moisture, and failure to attend to it regularly will result in just as much injury as neglect of the other important matters.

OREGON MUMS AND HOLLY.

We have received from Messrs. Clarke Bros., Portland, Oregon, some of their late chrysanthemums, of which they had a crop of 1,500 blooms for Christmas. The varieties were Maud Dean, E. Dailledouze and Minnie Wanamaker, and the blooms were all of exhibition grade. While some had been slightly frosted in transit, several were in remarkably good condition considering their long journey from the Pacific coast. Evidently they know how to put finish on their flowers there as well as to develop size.

They also send a number of sprays of Oregon-grown English holly, which they say is the only kind they can sell there. The red berries are much larger and more numerous than those on the American holly.

Another interesting item was quite a quantity of sprays of the "Oregon Wild Grape" (Berberis Aquifolium. Syn. Mahonia aquifolia), with its holly-like foliage. Messrs. Clarke write that the woods are full of this berberis and that it will no doubt some day become popular in the East as a Christmas green. The average retail buyer would undoubtedly mistake it for holly minus the berries.

READY FOR DELIVERY.

50 Barclay Street, NEW YORK.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

Christmas has come and gone and the demand for flowers of all kinds never better. Holly and other greenery went well at very good prices. The Lake View Rose Gardens were taxed to the utmost and whilst they handled immense quantities of roses and carnations, there was a shortage in several lines. Taking into consideration the long absence of sunlight stock was of excellent quality. Heavy orders for New Year's kept Supt. Roney on the anxious seat, and Mr. A. N. Broadhead realizes there is not yet sufficient glass to produce enough stock to fill orders at such times as these. What was most needed was a wizard to change dull weather into bright.

Plants sold well. Palms and Boston ferns, with azaleas, were in strong force. The Garden's retail store made a handsome appearance under the skillful hand of Artist Heelas, who did himself proudly.

The Walter Mott Seed & Bulb Co. made quite a showing with seasonable goods. One show window was occupied by an Indian basket weaver during the holiday week and created quite an attraction, at the same time proving a paying advertisement. A department for grain and feed has been added. This will assist in promoting local trade. Walter is much encouraged with the first year's business for the new house.

TROUBLE WITH BOILER.

Replying to H. M. M., in view of the fact that two or three hours' firing is necessary and assuming that the boiler in question is as stated, a 10-horse-power of usual proportions, the trouble is caused, undoubtedly, by defective combustion, which may be due to several causes, for instance, improper firing and manipulation of the dampers, poor fuel, or some high building, trees or other obstruction causing a down draft on the chimney. We would suggest that all the flues be thoroughly cleaned out and an inspection be made to see that no cold air leaks in at the chimney connection or at any point other than through the ash pit, then try it with a thin fire. If this does not give the desired results, a higher stack will be necessary.

Your correspondent does not state how much radiation he is operating from the boiler. In any case it should not exceed 900 square feet, measuring all mains; 800 feet we consider a reasonable amount in greenhouse heating to put on a standard 10-horse-power boiler.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

The Christmas Trade.

The dull weather of the past month had a depressing effect on the quantity, as well as the quality, of the Xmas cut. As it was, there was some high-grade stock offered, and also considerable trash. But it was Xmas and everything went.

Carnations, except red, were in fairly good supply. The red were cleaned out at first rush. Roses were scarce, and red not to be had for love nor money. As for American Beauties, there were very few on the market and they brought good prices. There was an abundance of Romans and paper whites. Poinsettias were all ordered three days before Xmas and no more were to be had. Azaleas sold fairly well, although there were some white left over. Color is what is wanted more than white, and on every hand you hear the plaint, "Haven't you got something in red? Not even a plant left? Oh my! what shall I get; I did so much want red!" As predicted, a heavy trade was done in holly, loose and in wreaths, most of the latter being tied with red bows. One firm alone sold 200 cases. Very little mistletoe was handled; the quality was poor and prices high. The use of ground pine wreathing is still declining, not so much being used this year as last.

Very little attempt was made at artistic display by the stores, the windows being filled with plants for sale. Henry Smith had festoons of green around the store, and at each loop was hung a bell of red paper, neatly gotten up.

Wholesale prices ranged a little lower than Chicago prices, while retail prices were as follows: American Beauties, anything up to $1.50 each; other roses, $2 to $3 per dozen. Carnations, 75 cents to $1 per dozen; Prosperity and Lawson, $1.25 per dozen. Lilies, $4 per dozen. Romans, paper whites and valley, 75 cents. There were a great many pans of Romans, also valley. Violets were scarce and wholesaled at $2.50 and $3.00 per 100.

On the whole, trade was some better than last year. The demand was general rather than for anything special, unless for something red. Shipping trade was excellent, although the high wholesale prices cut it down some. Fault is already being found with the raised express charges. Towns along the line of the Interurban railway have suddenly found it convenient to have their flowers sent on the Interurban and not by express. Business still continues brisk, as society is very active with weddings and receptions. G. F. C.

TABLE OR VASE BUNCH.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph of a so-called table vase or hand bunch of about fifty Bridesmaid and La France roses. It was arranged by Mr. Walz, using some of the same flowers that were used in the funeral bunches of roses illustrated some time since. Asparagus plumosus is used to add grace to the bunch.

Such bunches are used in a variety of ways. In vases on the table, the mantel or other suitable situation, and being made up at the store are quickly put in place when decorating a house. They can also be used as hand bunches, in which case more care is used in finishing what might be termed the handle and the asparagus placed less loosely.

This illustration, showing one of the more simple forms of arrangement, should have appeared earlier in our series.

We expect to present next week a comprehensive article on brides' bouquets, illustrated by four engravings from photographs of bouquets arranged by four different artists. And the week after that we shall have a similar article on bridesmaids' bouquets, illustrated by four engravings of such bouquets, also arranged by different artists.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

The protracted dull and cloudy weather which prevents frequent syringing is favorable to the increase of red spider, and great care and precaution must be used to keep them in check.

In Meteor houses, particularly, where a high temperature must be maintained, they, if neglected, will increase with amazing rapidity, and create a great deal of damage in a very short time. Advantage should be taken of every clear day to syringe them thoroughly, so that the undersides of every leaf get a good washing, and sufficient force must be applied to dislodge the spider and break up the web, paying particular attention to corners and all places where the heat is likely to concentrate, as these are its favorite haunts and breeding places.

Many are the compounds recommended for the prevention and extermination of the pest, but in a rose house there are none to compare with cleanliness and an intelligent use of the syringe. In a season like the present, when from lack of sunshine, soil and foliage dry slowly, extra care should be taken to use as little water in the operation as is consistent with success. By using a "Childs" nozzle, with spoon attachment syringing can be accomplished efficiently with half the volume of water generally applied.

By keeping shoots and branches well tied up and allowing no foliage to straggle over the sides of the bench, where they cannot be sprayed with the syringe, it is much easier to keep the spider in subjection. A careful watch for spider should also be kept on Beauty houses; the density of the foliage affords them a shelter from which it is difficult to dislodge them after they have acquired a good foothold.

Other pests, especially green fly, will have to be attended to periodically, as this is a season which peculiarly suits such soft-bodied insects, which, as a rule, are shy of bright sunshine.

By the way, some years ago, when on a trip through England, I visited the extensive rose nurseries of Dickson & Sons, Chester, and in a conversation with one of their oldest growers he informed me that aphis were always most numerous during the prevalence of east winds, and recently in an English publication I came across the same statement, but could find no reason given why an east wind, which is usually the coldest and most disagreeable of summer winds in that locality, should best suit this soft and frail insect. Is there any record if an east wind has a like effect in this part of the globe?

In last week's issue, replying to J. R. E., an omission slightly altered the meaning of a sentence, which should read: "Even when in the best of health 60 degrees night temperature is too high." Day temperature should range from 62 degrees during cloudy weather to 72 degrees in bright sunshine. RIBES.

AZALEA MOLLIS, ETC.

Subscriber asks: "How long and in what temperature does it take to force Azalea Mollis, Viburnum plicatum and Dicentra spectabilis for Easter?"

The first two are hardy shrubs and we will deal with them first. The time it takes for the shrubs to be forced into flower will depend a good deal on the temperature, and they are better brought along moderately fast than rushed in a very high temperature. As both these shrubs are sold as decorative plants, and not as cut flowers, they are much more satisfactory to the purchaser when not over forced. Allow seven weeks for the Azalea mollis and eight weeks for the Viburnum. Give them 50 degrees at night for the first three weeks, raising the temperature 5 to 10 degrees if they need it for the last three or four weeks. Spray them daily until the flowers appear. Especially is this helpful when first brought in.

Give the Dicentra seven weeks, and it should not be over 50 degrees at night and in a light house, or it will be soft and useless. Subscriber spelled this beautiful hardy perennial "Dielytra," as it used to be written forty years ago. Nicholson calls it "Dicentra," and that is correct; it also has the great advantage of being easier to spell and pronounce.

I have never forced Viburnum plicatum, but have V. opulis—the common snowball. Are you sure, Subscriber, that it is not opulis you have? V. plicatum is the better shrub, often called the high bush cranberry from its fruit, but V. opulis is, I think, a better shrub for forcing; still I may be mistaken. William Scott.

CARNATION NOTES—WEST.

The Carnation Society Convention.

The most important event of the year in so far as the carnation is concerned is to take place at Brooklyn in February. Every carnation grower, and I might say that every florist in the country, will readily understand that I am referring to the annual convention of the American Carnation Society. The leading question just now is, "are you going?" and I am glad to know that in many instances the answer is "yes," even if it is sometimes coupled with "if I can get away," or "if my blooms are worth taking," etc.

These gatherings are great educators to those who attend and every grower at least should make an effort to go, if only for a day. Here you can see the cream of the carnation blooms from the leading growers from all parts of our land and you are able to get an idea where you stand among the carnation growers of the day. And what is perhaps more directly profitable to you, is you can see what are the highest grade varieties, for here you can see vases full of every meritorious variety, and sometimes a few without merit. You can also become acquainted with all the new varieties that are to be put on the market in the very near future and you can compare them with the leaders of what are already on the market. This alone will pay you for going if you are in the habit of investing in a few hundred of the new ones each year, as you are able to know what you are buying. Take your note book along and take plenty of notes, because you cannot remember all you want to from now until next year or even the year after, perhaps; there are too many that you want to remember. While you are looking over the new ones try to have a talk with the exhibitor and post yourself as to the particular qualities of the variety you think you want, its requirements, etc. You know a man can tell you better about these things in conversation than he can in a letter, and you have more chance to ask questions.

If you have some fine blooms at home take some along and see how they compare with those from other growers; perhaps they will not look so fine among the top notchers as they did at home, when there were no better around. You can soon find out where you are at. Perhaps you have some seedlings of your own, as many of us have, and some of them look to you as though they stood way above everything else in their color, and perhaps you really have a world-beater. Bring them along and compare them with the best there are and let others see what you have accomplished. There is no class of men that will give you due credit quicker and more unstintingly than our carnation growers and hybridists. They know what it takes to produce a variety that is an improvement over the fine varieties we already have and more than one grower has leaped into prominence through the production of one good variety of carnation; yes, I could mention a dozen of them.

There is no question but that you can judge a variety best by putting it alongside of another good variety, and if this were done more there would not be heard so often from some one who left his blooms at home these words: "I've got better blooms than those at home, etc." I have seen the speaker of those words taken up a few times, and in every case he had to eat his words, although in some cases I think the speaker really thought he was telling the truth. There would also be fewer worthless varieties disseminated each year if the raisers would attend these conventions oftener, although the Am. Car. Society has done great things along this line, for without the endorsement of this society a new introduction will have a hard road to travel the first year or two.

Another thing I want to say. Don't go to the convention and ask some friend to take you in and try to gain all you can for nothing, but go to the secretary and plank down your two dollars and make up your mind that you want to be a member of a society whose conventions and exhibitions are worth going miles to see, and help the good cause along.

If you do take some blooms along of your pets you will, of course, want them to look their very best, and it is not too early to get them in shape. Select about twice as many buds as you want to take, buds that will be in bloom just about that time, and tie them up to their stakes so that the bloom will look up toward the light, as it will open better than if it hangs over. Take off all the leading shoots and buds from those plants except about four or five to each plant. I might, perhaps, better say, take off about half of them, because if you rob the plants you are likely to cause the calyxes to split on those that remain. The idea is to throw all the strength you can into those buds, or as much as they will stand. Give them a little extra food, too, and if the stems need a little stiffening give them a sprinkling of lime or a light dose of bone.

Sometimes we hear objections raised to the way the originators grow and show such (overgrown, it is often called,) blooms, because the varieties will not produce the same grade of blooms under ordinary culture and the grower is often disappointed. I think that is a wrong idea, though, because naturally the raiser of a variety wants to show you how fine a bloom you can get from his variety if you handle it right and, in fact, you look at the quality of the blooms first when you size up a variety and after quality you inquire about the quantity. You should have enough judgment to know that nine out of every ten varieties that are sent out are grown about as well as they can be grown by the raiser.

You would not invest your money in a variety if you saw a lot of ordinary or even fine commercial blooms at the show. The raiser could talk to you all day telling you that they had no special culture and that you could produce much better blooms, etc., without avail. Your answer would be, "show me." The raiser must show the quality, and we take his word for the quantity. So bear this in mind when you go around making a list of varieties that you want to grow another year. I hope I may see many readers of the Review at the convention. A. F. J. Baur.

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.

Feeding.

The days are now growing longer; all plants instinctively feel the influence of the sun's journey back; slow though it may be, it is a law of nature for all plant life to awaken from its slumber or make efforts in that direction.

It is now then, that feeding should be carried on in earnest. Some varieties have already been in need of a stimulant to brighten the color and finish their blooms well, partly perhaps owing to the fact that the soil was too poor to carry them through the holidays.

The main lot should have done well, at least with a slight top dressing, the fertilizing qualities of which have been carried into the soil by watering. It will be found on examination that the soil is well filled with a network of roots. In view of this there is good reason to believe your stock is in a condition to relish and digest well prepared carnation food in a liquid form and will give good returns for an outlay of material and work bestowed.

We use barrels in the boiler room, which are filled with water into which bags of sheep or cow manure are put; the very warm temperature there soon causes the bags to float; after floating 24 hours these "dead dogs," as the boys call them, are taken out and allowed to drain over night. This gives a clear solution which is pumped and forced, by a special pump, through hose to any part desired. One man at pump, another in the house will distribute a large amount in half an hour.

For a change of diet we add at intervals to the manure a small quantity of hen manure or fine ground bone but never chemical manures, using this on a few designed for experimental purposes. We allow one half bushel manure to 50 gallons water and soak each bag twice, allowing more time for the second soaking. A great deal depends upon the quality of manure as to what strength of solution you will obtain, but see to it that it is not too strong; the color of medium strength coffee is about right.

As to time and condition of soil when applying, my opinion is that early in the morning of a bright day and when the plants are not suffering for water. If any dry spots exist in the bench, water first, endeavoring to have the soil evenly moist, not soaking wet nor by any means dry. The operation of feeding can hardly be taught, especially when one is not on the ground to investigate. It will do no good to feed a batch of sick plants.

The condition of soil when plants were benched must be considered, also the amount of bloom that has been cut from a certain variety, thereby impoverishing the soil proportionately. Certain varieties, notably Bradt and most reds, have strong appetites, while Eldorado does best on rather poor soil, with possibly a week decoction just before Memorial Day. A perfectly safe rule to follow is not to feed strongly at long intervals, but oftener, employing a solution of medium strength.

From reports I learn the disciples of sterilized soil are compelled to feed quite early in the season. However, this may be one of the features of the method.

GEO. S. OSBORN.

RHUBARB—LETTUCE—HEN MANURE.

Last season my rhubarb was a complete failure. I let it freeze thoroughly before putting in house, and planted under center bed of vegetable house. Please advise me how to grow it and about what time to bring it in so as to have it ready by March 1.

My lettuce is running up and not heading as in previous seasons. Is it the fault of bad seed or of the hot fall?

Would a compost of ashes and hen manure at the rate of two bushels of ashes to one of hen manure make good, strong fertilizer? How would it compare with bone flour for strength?

L. H. W.

It is possible that the rhubarb roots were placed too close to the heating pipes and were consequently too warm and dry. If this was not the case they must have been old worn out plants or L. H. W. would have got something out of them.

Rhubarb should be forced gently, a temperature of 55 to 60 degrees being quite high enough. The freezing of the roots before getting them inside was all right, providing they were thawed out very gradually. It is a wrong policy to move rhubarb or any other roots that are to be forced into a warm house while they are in a frozen condition. Leave them stay out in a cool shed for a day or two, then set your plants closely together in the place where they are to be forced, filling in the intervening spaces with soil and covering the crowns to the depth of several inches. Water as often as the condition of the soil demands, and it should not be over six weeks before the rhubarb will begin to give some return.

The first stalks should be pulled very carefully so that the coming crop will not be injured, and then the same plants will give a reasonable succession of stalks. The cooler the atmosphere the larger and heavier will be the crop, though it will take a corresponding length of time to come to maturity. L. H. W. should get in his roots at once to have a crop ready by March 1. If rhubarb is grown in the dark it is much better, contains less acid, and therefore is much sweeter than stalks developed in daylight, and the leaves being of a beautiful reddish color give it a much more attractive appearance.

To get the best results in forcing rhubarb the plants should be specially grown for two or three years in very rich soil, the richer the better, thus insuring vigorous, healthy crowns. Old worn out roots cannot be expected to force with any degree of success.

Extreme dryness at the roots will cause lettuce to "bolt," as it is termed, as will also too high a night temperature. L. H. W., if he has successfully grown lettuce previously, should be in a position to know if he has observed the same cultural details as before. I think the trouble must be in the growing. A temperature of 40 to 45 is ample for nights. A warm fall seems to me a pretty remote cause for plants failing to head up in January. The trouble should not be from the seed unless your correspondent has got hold of Grand Rapids or some other variety that does not make a solid head.

Hen manure certainly makes a strong fertilizer—too strong, in fact, unless used carefully. So far as the actual analysis goes I know nothing of the relative "strength" of the two manures, but I would personally have no use for chicken manure if I had to choose between that and bone flour. Bone flour is safer, cleaner and better in every way for greenhouse culture. Hen manure is very caustic and probably the safest way to use it is in liquid form, putting 5 or 6 pounds into a 50-gallon barrel of water. I have used it in a dry state when old, to mix with soil in the proportion of a 4-inch pot to a wheelbarrow of soil, with apparently good results, but I cannot say that I have much use for it as a fertilizer.

CHAS. H. TOTTY.

CALLAS.

In last week's issue Bro. Scott, in replying to a question, seems to be unaware of the fact that in recent years a disease among callas has developed, particularly among those farmed on the Pacific coast, which has proved very destructive under indoor culture. To convince him that the trouble does not always arise either from ignorance or carelessness in the method of culture, I will cite a few facts in my own experience with it.

For nearly thirty years I had grown "this stately old flower" successfully and had never heard of anyone having trouble with it, but five years ago our stock of roots (I dare not say bulbs for fear of those "terrible tawse") being low we purchased some California grown ones, potted some and benched the remainder, using exactly the same method of culture which had proved so successful in former years.

After the plants had acquired five or six leaves these began to show withered blotches along the edges, which gradually spread inward. An examination of the plants showed plenty of healthy feeding roots, but the edges of the leaf stems, just where they entered the soil, were covered with a brown colored slime, and alongside of the crown there was a small hole filled with the same kind of slobber. This kept increasing in size until it reached the crown, when the leaves toppled over. The under part of the root remained fresh for a long time. From the Californians the trouble spread to our own grown roots, until by the end of the season four-fifths of the whole stock was dead.

The next season we purchased a fresh consignment from a different dealer, and had, if anything, a worse experience, and had practically given up the idea of trying again.

As remedies we tried sulphur in its various forms, lime (hot and air slaked), wood ashes, salt, etc., but nothing seemed to have the least effect.

At this time we had an opportunity of purchasing 300 home grown roots, of which we availed ourselves. Following our usual mode of culture, the first year we had a very fine show; this season they are simply magnificent and are "the pride o' the place and its neighborhood a'." This is not an isolated case, as "Father William" can find out if he sends out a few tracers.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Seeds.

There are a few seeds that should be sown now. Centaurea gymnocarpa, if you grow it at all, but less every year do we find a use for this once popular foliage plant.

If you are well supplied with canna roots you don't want to bother with seedlings, yet if your stock is low and you want to increase it cheaply you can raise excellent plants by sowing at once. Cannas come largely true from seed, and if you get your supply of seed from a good firm you will be unlikely to get inferior varieties, because only approved varieties are now grown by any good firm. There is often but a small percentage of canna seed which germinates. It's because it is old. I believe they should be sown as soon as ripe. Sow in flats of half sand and half leaf mold, and plunge the flats into the warmest part of your propagating bench, or you can sow them in a drill in the sand of the propagating bench. Some soak the seed in almost boiling water for a day. Others with a strong, sharp knife cut off the smallest piece of the thick covering of the seed. This lets in the moisture and starts germination. Neither will hurt the seed and may help, but if you are sure the seed is of last summer's saving it is unnecessary.

Cannas.

While on the subject of cannas, don't forget to look over your stock of roots just now to see that they are not starting. You don't want to start them yet for two months. If they are on boards beneath a bench where little or no drip reaches them they should be doing all right, but if showing signs of making a growth move them all over. That will check their growth.

Begonias.

The bedding begonias of the Vernon type can now be sown and will make very satisfactory plants by bedding out time. The begonias make beautiful flower beds and are a change from the much used geraniums and cannas. The seed is very minute, and if sown on the smooth surface of a pan of leaf mold and sand only wants pressing into the soil. Be sure to sow thinly. It is so easy to let ten times as much slip out of your fingers as should be sown of these minute seeds. As soon as large enough to handle transplant into flats an inch apart, and when they have grown to crowding pot into 3-inch, which is as large as necessary, for these bedding begonias do much better when planted out if small thrifty plants.

Verbenas.

Sow verbenas early in February. They make healthier plants than the cuttings from named varieties and the colors are nowadays just as good, and a mixed bed is just as pretty as a mass of one color.

Hollyhocks.

We were told recently by a man who travels that the hollyhock was a very favorite flower at the fashionable watering places of the East the past summer. I don't blame them. It's a most picturesque decorative flower and a vase of majestic spikes has an attraction out of the common. We sowed in September and have plants in 4-inch pots in a house that is seldom over 38 to 40 degrees during winter. If the disease lets us escape these should be fine plants and flower early, for they can be out as soon as the soil can be dug. Still they can be sown now and you can have them in flower by August. Obtain the best strain you can hear of, keep them in 50 degrees until they are in 3-inch pots, and in the very lightest position. Keep them growing and by the middle of April they should be good plants in 4-inch pots and almost all of them will flower the first summer.

Pansies.

Ninety per cent of all the pansies sold in the spring are sown in July and August and wintered in the field with some covering of straw or hemlock boughs; or if wanted still earlier for filling vases, then they are better in a cold frame. These plants make an early and beautiful burst of bloom and are soon over. Yet if I wanted to have a border or bed of pansies to last all summer, which they will and are well worth growing for the purpose, I would sow them at the end of this month and transplant them into flats early in March, which is all the labor there is about them and the coolest bench you have will suit them. At planting time—say end of April—they look small and flowerless compared with the fall sown plants, but they will be in beautiful flower when the others are long past gone.

Smilax.

Sow smilax end of this month. It will take up little room in the seed boxes for a long time and it is very essential that you should have a good, strong 3-inch plant to renew the bed about the first week in July. Although this beautiful climber is no longer "the thing" for decorative use, there seems plenty of other uses for it and no retail greenhouse should be without its own supply.

Asparagus.

Asparagus plumosus (misnomer nana) if sown at once and encouraged to grow along in a temperature of 60 degrees will make good plants for replanting your bed in June or July. Specialists on this beautiful plant let it remain for some years without replanting. Their houses are so high that if they have six feet of naked growth at the bottom they can still have twenty feet of feathery vine on top, but I think the average florist who grows for his own use should replant every third year. He then gets strings of moderate length, but every foot useful, and more of the short sprays which are really as greatly in demand as the long strings. It is often planted out on benches and beds for this purpose alone and no encouragement given to make strings. For whatever purpose always have it in solid beds on the ground.

Asparagus Sprengeri has been in great demand this winter. You can buy small plants in the spring, but you can sow the seed now and raise it yourself cheaper. To grow this useful plant profitably it must have a deep bed or box. A shallow bed will give one crop of sprays and then it's over.

I do not think of any other seeds that require attention just now. It's seven or eight weeks before any of the hardy annuals want sowing.

The Propagating Bench.

From now into middle of March is the most favorable time for propagating most of our bedding and decorative plants. Brisk and steady firing keeps the sand warm and the atmosphere of the house is cool—the precise conditions for the successful propagation of nearly all plants that are increased by cuttings. Don't propagate some common plants just because they root easily. It is five long months, or nearly so, before many of our soft wooded plants can be put out. I allude to such easy rooting plants as ageratum, heliotrope and coleus. A few put in now and shifted on will give you many fine cuttings later on. Lobelia speciosa and gracilis for vases and the double sweet alyssum should now go in. The above and other plants can be propagated now and the old stock plants you lifted can be thrown out.

That useful little geranium, Mme. Salleroi, can be pulled to pieces and the cuttings put into the sand.

Vincas, both the green and variegated, should now be increased by good, healthy cuttings. Any later they would not make plants large enough, but those put in now root quickly and can by middle of May be in 3 or 3½-inch pots with three or four long, strong growths.

The same with Abutilon vexillarium, which is so useful in veranda boxes. And be sure to propagate that beautiful Abutilon Savitzii, so valuable as an edging.

Acalypha, which you may have had resting in boxes, should be got up and started growing in a warm house and it soon will give you young, tender growths which root quickly.

Fuchsias put into the sand now will be the best plants you have for the month of May and that is the month this old favorite sells.

Bouvardia.

If you want to grow any of the bouvardias, now or within a month is a good time to propagate. As is known by all of you, it is next to impossible to root cuttings of this plant in the ordinary way, but it lends itself most readily to increase by root propagation. Lift up a few plants, choosing the roots that are neither too small nor too thick and old. Young, healthy roots, if only the thickness of stove pipe wire are all right. Cut the roots into lengths one-half an inch long. Don't look for any eye for you won't see any. Smooth down a small space on your propagating beneh where the heat of the sand is greatest. It should be 70 degrees. Sprinkle the tiny pieces of root over the surface and press them in only enough to keep them from jumping about, when you put on with a sieve the covering of sand, which should be only thick enough to hide the roots. You will in three or four weeks see the little green growths, and when an inch high they can be potted into 2-inch pots, and stood in a warm house. The bouvardia is an easy plant to grow and deserves growing. It went out of fashion because the fad for roses and carnations swamped all other flowers.

Bougainvillea.

Bougainvillea is a plant that enters into the sales of some of the Eastern firms quite largely, and those who have seen the wonderful plants of B. Sanderiana grown by W. K. (Deacon) Harris must admit it is a most decorative plant. We grew it as early as anyone and sold out most of our stock to the above named gentleman because the Buffalo market was not educated enough to pay $10 for a plant that would drop its leaves and bracts in three or four days. This is another plant that has inconspicuous flowers, but the bracts are wonderfully developed and colored, as in the poinsettia. It roots in sand now. Take the ends of the shorter growths, not too succulent nor too ripened, and although not quick to root, you will lose few.

Cytisus.

Cytisus racemosus is another Easter flowering plant that has to be propagated about now. One year old plants are more desirable than larger. Don't take a small piece of the end of a shoot; it will root but make only a small plant. Take off a little bunch of growth—a little branch with three or four leads and with a "heel" where it was detached from the stronger branch. When this is rooted you have a good start towards a bushy little plant; and grown in pots with every encouragement, in a light house during summer, you will by Easter, 1904, have a 5 or 6-inch pot plant.

Geraniums.

We are at present putting in all the work we can on potting September struck geraniums from 2 to 3-inch pots. It's considerable labor, but I am sure it pays if you want good plants. These plants give a cutting about the first of February and then have the strength to make a good break. Don't, however, ruin the plant for the sake of a cutting. There would be no profit in that. If they are not long enough for a cutting just pinch out the top. WILLIAM SCOTT.

GREVILLEAS—CINERARIAS.

W. & N. send us some leaves of this tree (Grevillea robusta), which have turned black and would soon decay. The leaves appear to be some of the older ones, and it is difficult to account for any trouble with this tree (for Australian tree it is) unless they have been kept in some dark, cool corner and standing very close together, so that no air nor light could get among them. It is such a hardy tree (although not enduring frost) that without any rough treatment I have never known it to lose a leaf except from being starved in too small a pot. Give them a light house and room to grow. Any temperature above freezing will do.

The same W. & N. also ask about cinerarias and say they are in "last pots," meaning, I suppose that no further shift will be given them before they flower. "The under leaves wilt. The soil is good; I am afraid to enrich it."

The cineraria is a very peculiar plant. A really finely flowered cineraria is a beautiful plant in a private conservatory and that's about the only place where they ought to be found, for they do not bring price enough to repay for the space and care. If there was a green fly within ten miles it would surely find out your cinerarias and come and board with you, but that is not the cause of the leaves wilting.

It should be needless to say that the cinerarias thrive in a very low temperature. Forty degrees at night is plenty, yet they will not stand 1-2 a degree of frost. The soil should be coarse and porous, yet firm, and water should pass freely through it. In a close soil without any fiber I have seen cinerarias lose their lower leaves and many die mysteriously. In another way they are peculiar plants. Let them be dry for a few hours and the lower leaves will wilt never to recover, while over-watering will kill the whole plant. I am induced to think that careless watering is the cause of the trouble in this case.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

We are passing through the coldest weather of the season, the thermometer ranging from 6 to 8 degrees below zero at night. The coal question is not nearly as serious here as in the east. In fact, we are especially lucky in that we are in no danger of a shortage, Cincinnati being especially well located. The various growers all report a plentiful supply on hand. The price, too, though considerably higher than in former years, is nothing compared to that which is being charged in the east. The price of lump soft coal now is $4 per ton, delivered in the city; but I was talking to a grower who said that he was getting all he wanted of nut and slack at $2.25 per ton, delivered. Several out-of-town florists came here to buy coal by the carload, finding it much cheaper to buy here and pay the freight than to buy from their local dealers.

Trade is good, but stock is scarce. A great many wedding decorations and receptions used up a large quantity. There was also a great deal of funeral work, so white stock is especially scarce. The few good days of sunshine with which we were blessed during the past week have already made themselves felt in the quality of stock, roses especially showing a big improvement. The supply, however, is very short, especially in Brides, and many orders had to be turned down. Maids are in somewhat better supply than Brides, but there are not enough of them. A good many Meteors are being cut, but they so often come bull headed, and in other ways are so inferior to Liberty, that they move slowly. Liberties are in very short supply, most growers being off crop. Golden Gates are doing fine. Some extra good stock is to be had and it is quickly cleaned out. American Beauties, especially long-stemmed ones, are in fairly good supply and sell well. Medium length stems, say from 18 to 24 inches, are the best sellers. Short-stemmed ones sell well also.

Carnations in all grades are in much better supply, and the quality is good. The only shortage is in red ones. Lawson is beginning to split badly. Apollo is doing the same. Most other varieties seem to be standing the dark weather of the past month in very good style. If more growers were on to Dick Witterstaetter's method of patching up a bursted calyx, they would not lose so much on bursted flowers. It is done with a very fine wire. Dick has it down to a science, and it is very hard to detect.

Bulbous stock is selling well, there being an especially good call for narcissus. Harrisii lilies beat them all, and are sold before they are in bloom, at the remunerative price of $2.50 per dozen.

Violets were never more scarce at this season, and there are virtually none to be had.

Notes.

There was quite a stir in wholesale circles this week, when the announcement was made that J. M. McCullough's Sons had bought out the Cincinnati Cut Flower Co. This purchase winds up the affairs of one of the oldest commission houses in the city.

Dock Sunderbruch, who was the largest stockholder in the Cincinnati Cut Flower Co., will be the manager of the cut flower department in J. M. McCullough's Sons' establishment. This arrangement is only temporary, as Mr. Sunderbruch expects to soon open a retail store.

W. Loebes, formerly with the Lockland Lumber Co., has organized the Greenhouse Construction Co. The company is located at 32 East Third street, Cincinnati, and will do a general greenhouse construction business.

Visitors were: H. M. Altick, Dayton, Ohio, and E. T. Grave, Richmond, Ind.

BUFFALO.

There is not much to record in the last week's history. It has been mostly occupied in sending out bills for the business we have done, and opening envelopes with the familiar remark "Please remit." A man who wants to pay and will pay as soon as possible (the possible is indefinite) should be esteemed, for he will pay as soon as he can draw on his balance in the bank. He will seldom grumble at the goods sent and with pleasure liquidates his obligations, and is better pleased to pay a bill than to receive, for what little else have we than to be at peace. Contentment is better than riches, but the old darky sagely remarked when he heard that quotation: "Ah kind a think, sah, Ah could get along wif both."

We have had some sunshiny days of late when Old Sol ran his rainbow course, or rather we were revolving so that we saw his genial face from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m., and we stood in a neighboring cigar store and said, "We are blessed." As I in my feeble way have frequently said, we are children of our environments. We are survival of the elements and the weather was not made for us, and if we don't like it we can get off, as many are getting off every second.

Did you notice that excellent little story in the papers last week, dedicated to Adam Graham, of Cleveland? A physician made his call on a very sick gentleman in the early morning, and as he was ushered in by the butler he remarked, "I hope your master's temperature is lower this morning." The Scotch butler remarked: "I wudna be certain o' that; he died this mornin' at 6 o'clock." According to the Scotch butler, his master is not feeling the terrible hardships of the coal famine.

The trade in posies has dropped off considerably since New Year's, and the great gait that "sassiety" went has left them with nervous prostration. Still business is fairly good and uses up all the products of our houses and incoming shipments.

The new firm started on the 10th. Its name is Byrnes & Slattery and is located on Main street. Mr. Byrnes is a son of Colonel Byrnes, a veteran of the war. I mean the real war where Grant figured. He is a tall, handsome youth who has had a year in New York. And Mr. Slattery has been ten years with Thorley. He belongs to that race which is not uncommon in the big city, known as the Hibernico-Americano. Its a variety of the biped that is quick and active and doubtless means well, but is handicapped with the belief that "Ney Yoark" is the center of the universe and all of us poor creatures outside of it have much to learn. He is with all that a very genial, nice little man, and as I once said on a previous occasion, the more the merrier.

If Mr. Thorley parts with many more of his valuable assistants, what is he going to do? I do really pity him; all his Craker Jacks are coming to this terrible, slow town. One firm has gone to great expense to advertise that he has a Thorley man, and now we have the real thing in business for himself. If they can teach us how to keep violets two days without losing their sweetness, or American Beauties from turning blue, or carnations from slipping into slumber, they will have conferred a great blessing on our poor craft. In all other branches we are more than proficient.

I should like to have said something about coal this issue, but it is too late. The Rev. Edward Everett Hale says he sees no solution but that government should own or control the coal mines. He is not an anarchist nor an advanced socialist. He is the pride of this country's liberal divinity and philosophy. A great change will come and must come. Men are ruined in our calling, and if they become enlightened and temperate anarchists they have only followed the great law of nature, "self preservation."

We are better off in Buffalo than the great majority of cities, but had enough to only strengthen my belief, which I have had for many years, that the people should own all natural monopolies, which coal mines have now become.

The Holiday Trade.

The florists of this city can look back on Christmas of 1902 as the most successful holiday season ever experienced. The volume of business was considerably in excess of former years, while there was a notable increase in the demand for better priced goods. Cut flowers of best grade, particularly roses, were scarce, and the supply below the demand. The weather preceding Christmas being variable, with only an occasional bright day, and several of our growers having their roses off crop, accounts for the shortage in that line. Carnations of the fancy kind were also scarce, and such varieties as Hobart, Lawson, Spreckels and Prosperity brought fancy prices. There was a good demand for orchids, such as cattleyas, lælias and Cypripedium insigne, and many more of those flowers could have been disposed of. Bulbous stock was fair in supply and of good quality; valley and Romans found ready sale. Violets were plentiful and of excellent quality and enormous quantities were disposed of. Cut poinsettias came up from the southern part of the state where they are grown outside, and although the bracts were rather small they made a gorgeous display and were used to quite an extent for decorating. Good berried holly was somewhat scarce, while redberries, greens and trees were in liberal supply and sold well.

The demand for pot plants of all kinds was exceedingly good and especially so with flowering plants, of which there were not nearly enough. The shortage was particularly noticeable in good poinsettias. Very few azaleas were seen. A limited number of tulips, though very short stemmed, found quick sale. Some fine Otaheite oranges, well fruited, brought good prices. Gloire Lorraine begonias were rather small, but sold well just the same. Roman hyacinths in pans and boxes sold well. Made-up fern pans and also foliage plants were much in demand.

On the whole, both growers and retailers express themselves as having experienced a most prosperous and in every way satisfactory holiday season. With some of the larger stores during the rush the orders came in so fast that they were compelled to close their doors to ascertain whether they had sufficient stock to fill orders.

Various Items.

H. Plath, of Ocean View, contemplates the erection of another greenhouse for ferns and palms in order to meet an ever increasing demand.

Sievers & Boland, 25 Post street, recently had the decorating of the cableship Silvertown, the occasion being the farewell reception given by Mr. Clarence Mackay before the departure of the big steamer on her cable laying mission across the Pacific. It was one of the largest decorations ever done here and was very fine.

Miss Fecheimer, Polk and Sutter streets, found her place insufficient to accommodate her holiday business and rented an adjoining store which happened to be vacant. Miss Fecheimer also had the decorating of the Concordia club rooms for the New Year's banquet and entertainment. It was a $500 decoration.

Paul Grallert, of Colma, is negotiating for the purchase of a tract of land in Oakland and if successfully carried out intends to move his houses there in the spring.

Chas. Fick, of San Mateo, was the recipient of a very nice Christmas present. It is a boy and congratulations are in order.

The Pacific Coast Horticultural Society held its regular meeting in the Mission opera house Jan. 3, with a large attendance, some sixty-five members being present. Mr. Waddington read a very interesting paper, entitled "Gardeners as Educators," which was well received. After the regular routine of business had been transacted the entertainment committee had provided a most enjoyable programme for the entertainment of members and their guests, members of the Hortensia, the Oakland Gardeners' Society, of which quite a number had accepted the invitation, extended them to participate in the high jinks.

Vocal and instrumental selections were rendered by talented members; graphophone selections and also stories and speeches made the evening pass most pleasantly. Refreshments of beer, punch and sandwiches were provided, not to forget a siphon of soda water for Mr. Cleis, that gentleman having expressed his opposition to any stronger beverage.

An occasional affair of this kind is very desirable, as it brings members together, renews old acquaintances, promotes good fellowship and strengthens the society, which, though only a little over a year old, has attained the most gratifying membership of 132, with a cash balance in the treasury of over two hundred dollars. FRISCO.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The bitter cold weather has naturally shortened up the supply and roses are somewhat scarce. Of carnations there is enough to meet demands though none too many white, and there is occasionally a small surplus of colored sorts. Should the demand increase to any appreciable extent there would be a serious shortage in both roses and carnations. As it is rose prices are certainly high for the season, quality considered.

The receipts of violets are much in excess of demand and prices have weakened. Many of them are Lady Campbell and these are always sold with difficulty and at a sacrifice in this market after New Year's. When there are sufficient of the darker colored ones Campbell will not sell.

There is less bulb stock in the market this season than usual, indicating that the losses of many growers last year carried conviction. It has sold somewhat better this year on account of the scarcity of other flowers.

Various Items.

Mr. C. M. Dickinson has gone to West Baden, Ind., to see if the springs there will not assist in helping him to regain his usual health.

Fritz Bahr is building a new residence at Highland Park and it will be a better one than the one destroyed by fire.

W. H. Kidwell is the father of a 14-lb. baby girl.

The changes in the Auditorium Annex have been completed and Mr. P. J. Hauswirth has returned to the Michigan ave. side, where he has a fine large new store. His address is now 227 Michigan ave.

January 13 was the date for the annual meeting of the Horticultural Society of Chicago, but as President Chadwick was unable to be present, and as he had matters of importance to present to the society an adjournment was taken until February.

Andrew Peterson and Mr. Sandstrom, Paxton, Ill., were visitors last week.

Miss Rose Zahud, for some years with J. M. Smely, Aurora, has opened a floral store at 5500 Indiana ave., this city.

Mr. Joseph P. Brooks, foreman for Poehlmann Bros. Co., Morton Grove, is the happy father of twins (a boy and a girl), each weighing seven pounds, which arrived last Sunday. The little couple are bright and healthy and they and the mother are doing finely.

Fritz Bahr reports that Ed Winterson is "improving slowly."

The very severe weather has made it a hard week for many growers, who have had to keep on the jump to get coal enough. We hear of many who have been unable to keep more than a few days' supply ahead, and some have been where they had to have coal inside of 24 hours or shut down. But no casualties have yet been reported. The strain has been so severe, however, that another stretch of zero weather might cause heavy losses. All are praying for moderate weather that will give an opportunity for a breathing spell.

The St. Louis Florists' club has extended an invitation to the Chicago and Milwaukee Florists' clubs "to spend a pleasant day at the World's Fair City" sometime during the present month.

ST. LOUIS.

The Cut Flower Trade.

The cut flower trade in this city is nothing to brag of, and when you find a florist who is busy it is with funeral work. White flowers have been in good demand all the week.

On Saturday night a heavy snow storm set in, which continued until Sunday noon. The weather is cold and coal scarce and high, and the growers who are not well supplied with coal are likely to suffer.

Stock is not overplentiful and the prices remain high. Romans, always plentiful at this time of the year, are surprisingly scarce and only a few come in. Narcissus, too, seems scarce of late. Carnations are quite plentiful and of fine quality. Lawson, Joost and Crane are in high color; so is Daybreak. White is the best seller just now. In Bride and Maid roses, none too many are coming in to supply the demand. Good Beauties are always in demand and not many are in the market. Violets have a big demand and sell at sight at top prices.

Club Meeting.

The first meeting of the Florists' Club in the new year was held at the Odd Fellows Hall last Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The meeting was poorly attended, only ten being present to wish each other a happy and prosperous New Year.

It was decided at this meeting that the next meeting in February would be our annual Carnation meeting. A prize of $10 is offered for the best vase of fifty or more carnations to be judged by quality only. The prizes are $5, $3 and $2. These are for local growers only. A prize of $5 is offered for the best vase of carnations of the introduction of 1903, open for all. This meeting will take place Thursday, February 12, at 2 o'clock.

Mr. F. W. Taylor, chief of Agriculture and Horticulture of the World's Fair, and J. H. Hadkinson, head gardener of the World's Fair, were elected honorary members of the club.

A letter was read from Mayor Halstedt, of Belleville, regretting that he was unable to entertain the members at this meeting, but promised to do so at an early date. He also regretted being unable to attend this meeting for reasons of very pressing engagements with city matters.

The entertainment committee reported that the entertainment, the programme of which appears in these notes, would take place Saturday night, at 8 o'clock, in our meeting hall in Odd Fellows building, and that the invitations will be sent out one week in advance.

Mr. F. B. Call, of the St. Louis Carnation Co., read an essay on "Steam Heating," which was very instructive to the members. The essay will appear in the Review next week.

The essay for the February meeting is "Growing Carnations—Advantages of Early Planting," by William Winter, of Kirkwood, Mo. This essay alone should bring out a large attendance, as Mr. Winter is one of our most successful growers.

After some very interesting discussions on questions from the question box the meeting adjourned until Thursday afternoon, February 12, at 2 o'clock.

Notes.

Frederick W. Taylor, chief of the Agricultural Department of World's Fair, has had the title of Chief of Horticulture conferred on him by the executive committee. Mr. Taylor therefore becomes chief of two departments.

Mr. Baumann, of Richter & Baumann, of Chicago, was in town selling supplies.

Mr. Rudolph J. Mohr has left the Michel Plant and Bulb Co. Mr. Mohr will leave the city the latter part of this month to take charge of a place below Crystal City, Mo., which belongs to J. K. Kavanaugh, who will build a range of houses to grow cut flowers for the St. Louis market. Mr. Mohr will have full charge of the place.

Mr. E. W. Guy, of Belleville, was in town the past week and reports that he had a narrow escape from blood poisoning. He ran the point of a lead pencil into his arm, but is now out of danger.

Mr. F. M. Ellis, wife of Frank Ellis, the wholesale florist, is very ill and Frank is very much afraid that an operation will have to be performed, which we hope will not be necessary.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

There is not nearly enough stock to fill the orders. Tea roses are especially scarce. Business has improved considerably. There is great social activity. President James W. Paul, of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society, gave a brilliant ball on Friday of last week, which was elaborately decorated. This has been followed by a number of affairs, both large and small, which have kept the market in a lively state up to the present time. There is every reason to believe that the season will be a rushing one until Lent comes in six weeks.

The Street.

Every newspaper man knows that his most reliable information comes from the leading men in business who talk to him freely on matters of general interest. These talks are the pleasantest part of a newspaper man's work. The feeling that he is being trusted, that what to publish and what to omit is left to his judgment, is very gratifying. Every newspaper man also knows that the rumors in the air or on the street are generally unreliable and must be taken with a grain, sometimes with a whole spoonful, of salt. Yet the street frequently has things straight. Here is an example:

William Munro has taken the greenhouses of James Anderson, of Garrettsford, near Landsdowne, Pa., and will take possession on his return from Scotland, where he has gone to visit his family. Mr. Munro's first appearance in this city was about six years ago, when he succeeded P. H. Meehan as foreman for Myers & Samtman, at Chestnut Hill. Under his management this firm won the Beauty prizes in this city and in New York and kept up their reputation for high-grade stock. Some years ago Mr. Munro went to Lansdowne, taking charge of the greenhouses of J. Henry Bartram. The next year he succeeded W. A. Leonard as foreman for Robert Scott & Son, Sharon Hill, where he remained until the end of last month. Mr. Alexander B. Scott placed the utmost confidence in Mr. Munro's ability. His many friends wish him success in his new venture.

The Carnation Smoker.

A few hasty and imperfect lines on the January meeting of the Florists' Club appeared in this column last week. It was one of the most instructive and delightful affairs that the club has ever given. The carnation exhibit was very fine. As Eugene Dailledouze put it, "We are going to have some carnations before long." When compared with the varieties of ten years ago, every sort was a marvel. The general feeling seemed to be that the time had come when these fancy sorts are a necessity that people will pay, and pay well, to secure. Following is a full list of the exhibitors and names of varieties shown.

Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill.—Marshall Field, a striped variety similar to Mrs. Bradt; Harlowarden, crimson; Mrs. H. N. Higinbotham, Daybreak pink.

S. J. Reuter, Westerly, R. I.—Lillian Pond, fine white.

Isaac Passmore, West Chester, Pa.—Seedling No. 3, a fine large white, 3 inches in diameter.

Wm. G. Saltford, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—Fair Harvard, 3 inches, violet crimson.

Henry Eichholz, Waynesboro, Pa.—The Tiger, 3 inches, orange, striped pink.

The Queen.

The Review is indebted to Leo Niessen, who is selling agent for the new carnation "Queen," for the following history of this variety. Queen is a cross between a pink seedling and Daybreak that originated four years ago. It is a strong, free grower, making fine plants in the field. This season 4,000 plants were housed, one half in the end of August, the other half in September. From December 1 to 24 these 4,000 plants produced nearly 9,000 perfect flowers. The flowers are large in size, pure white in color, stems long and very sturdy, good calyx which rarely bursts even in dark weather; constitution, naturally vigorous, has not been weakened by over propagation. Mr. Neissen believes this variety will become a valuable market sort.

Germantown Horticultural Society.

The Germantown Horticultural Society held its annual meeting last Monday evening. The attendance was small, owing to the bitter cold weather. There was an exhibit of choice carnations. The out-of-town exhibitors were Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass., who sent a fine vase of Enchantress, which was much admired; the Little South Floral Co., Natick, Mass., who sent Queen, a promising white, apparently a coming commercial variety; Adonis, the best clear scarlet, was shown in good form by Robert Craig & Son. Edwin Lonsdale gave an interesting talk on begonia culture, dwelling especially on Gloire de Lorraine and its sports. He was closely followed throughout his remarks and afterwards answered many questions.

The former officers were re-elected: President, Edward Neville; vice-presidents, Edward J. Weston, Albert Woltemate and Edwin C. Jellett; secretary and treasurer, George Redles.

Notes.

The Lord & Burnham Co. have established headquarters in this city at the flower market, where they have a handsome model of their iron greenhouse, with ventilating apparatus, etc. D. T. Connor is in charge. A postal addressed to him, care of the Flower Market, 1228 Cherry street, will reach him promptly.

Samuel S. Pennock is receiving large quantities of fine double violets.

Carl Jurgens, Jr., of Newport, R. I., was in the city lately. He says this season's bulbs promise to be unusually fine. His firm is shipping Trumpet Major, campernelles, paper whites and other bulbous flowers to Leo Niessen.

John Ruppert, of H. A. Dreer, made a $400 sale of plants in one lot at the flower market the other morning—a good sale for this time of year.

B. F. Dorrance was in town lately.

Eugene Bernheimer was away part of this week visiting his out-of-town customers.

The fuel trouble grows more and more serious; it is a black winter.

Cinerarias and primroses are to be seen in the stores.

C. S. Van Waveren, representing his bulb-growing firm of Segers Bros., is starting on a six months' trip through the states. Mr. Van Waveren makes his home in Philadelphia.

Dr. Huey, the leading amateur rosarian of this city, is busy preparing the colored plates to be used in illustrating his lecture to be delivered before the National Rose Society in the spring of 1904.

J. Stern, who makes a specialty of wax flowers, has a large establishment at 1928 Germantown avenue, where he turns out many large orders, both for local and out-of-town customers.

Our bowling team won a fine victory over the Pan-American team last week, scoring three straight games. Captain Moss was ably assisted by Mooney, Dunham, Johnson and Yates. This victory strengthens the team's hold on first place.

John Dick, Sr., the widely known pioneer florist of this city, died at his home, Fifty-third st. and Woodland ave., on Tuesday, Jan. 13. Mr. Dick was famous for his camellias and roses in days gone by. He was one of the first to do a wholesale shipping plant business, and his establishment had at one time a national reputation. PHIL.

NEW YORK.

Club Meeting.

The New York Florists' Club's first meeting of the new year was held on Monday evening and notwithstanding the intense cold over thirty members attended. The new officers were installed and made eloquent acknowledgments of the honors done, and abundant promises of loyalty and labor for the best interests of the society.

Mr. Walter Sheridan read his interesting valedictory after two years of most efficient service as president, announcing a membership of 250, a handsome balance in the treasury and the unfailing harmony of officers and committees during all of his term of office, and the uniform courtesy and good will of the club's members, which he bespoke for his successor.

Mr. Troy's outlook was optimistic, and practical. He urged the "getting together" of all interested in the express question; the necessity of co-operation with the shippers; the desirability of the annual flower shows; the wisdom of summer outings, and the claims of the American Carnation Society.

The vice-president was escorted to his post with much ceremony by the "Adonises" of the club—Messrs. Elliott and Hafner. The speeches of Messrs. Traendly, Young and Weathered were in their accustomed vein of earnestness and loyalty.

The dinner and entertainment committees reported arrangements already completed for the annual banquet, at which a fine orchestra will discourse sweet music and select vaudeville artists will supplement the eloquence of the talent with which the club and its friends already overflow. Warren Ewell will deliver an address that will dwarf all past efforts, and many of the great speakers of the East are expected to "do their duty." The attendance of a goodly company is already assured.

Patrick O'Mara read the resolutions drafted by the special committee on the death of the club's member, Mr. A. S. McGlennon, which proved to be a beautiful tribute to that gentleman's memory. Two new members were elected and two nominated for membership.

A committee was appointed, composed of P. O'Mara, Jno. N. May and Walter F. Sheridan, to confer and co-operate with the committee of the S. A. F., concerning the desired reduction in express charges. A letter was read from the secretary of the Cincinnati Florists' Society, announcing willingness to co-operate with the New York Club in any way decided feasible and best. Mr. Kelsey made a forcible address, speaking particularly of the high rates and unsatisfactory service of the express companies, and suggesting the desirability of getting in touch with all organizations and associations having the same object in view.

A letter from the Brooklyn Horticultural Society was read, inviting the club to participate in the banquet of the Carnation Society, February 20.

Mr. O'Mara considered the "excessive charges" from the express company's standpoint, citing its many excuses for the added rates and telling of the nine months' labor necessary before the former concessions were secured. He advised florists around New York how essential concerted effort was in assisting the committee and the necessity of the strongest presentation of the case possible if practical results were to be attained.

Mr. Wallace recapitulated the excuses put forward by the companies in justification of their charges—the special service given, and special wagons used, and special messengers employed; the danger of damage to cut flowers; the lighter weight per cubic foot of space required as compared with other goods, a 25-pound box of flowers occupying as much room as 100 pounds of other commodities; the perishable nature of the goods and consequent increased risk and responsibility.

The treasurer's report showed the creditable balance of nearly $800 on hand. The secretary specified the achievements of the club during the year—its lectures, outings and exhibitions, its increased membership (22), and its average attendance (35).

The president announced the following committees: On awards—Geo. Cook, Henry Siebrecht, W. Duckham, Chas. Lenker, J. V. Phillips. House and entertainment—W. F. Sheridan, F. H. Traendly, Robert Kuhne. Dinner committee—C. W. Ward, W. F. Sheridan, F. H. Traendly, L. Hafner, S. Butterfield. Legislative committee—P. O'Mara, Jno. N. May, Alex. Burns.

Committees were appointed to draw up resolutions of sympathy on account of the deaths of Miss O'Mara, sister of ex-President O'Mara, and F. L. Harris, formerly of the Hunnewell estate at Wellesley, Mass., and an honorary member of the club.

Mr. O'Mara gave notice of a motion at the next meeting that refreshments be provided only for special meetings of the club, and on the occasions of lectures, or for the entertainment on "ladies' evenings" of the fair sex.

Mr. Wallace was called upon for information concerning the carnation convention and gave many interesting facts concerning it and the Art Institute and Citizens' Committees which are co-operating with the Brooklyn Horticultural Society; the banquet on February 20, with its provision for an attendance of 400, and the likelihood of St. Clair McElvery being selected as toastmaster for the occasion, one of the most brilliant literary men and orators of the city of churches.

Items.

Stumpp & Water Co. announce an unprecedented demand this season for their famous "Russian brand" of lily of the valley. Its reputation for "quality" is beyond dispute.

C. W. Ward is south on a business trip this week, which accounts for his absence from the meeting of the Florists' Club on Monday evening.

Mr. Nash, of the firm of Moore, Hentz & Nash, celebrated his half century on Saturday. The occasion was "bon ton," as Millang, the Beauty King, was radiant in silk hat and diamonds in honor of the affair; and congratulations were poured upon the genial "author of the trouble."

Ernst Asmus is on a business trip west, and doubtless will honor Chicago with his presence. See that he returns in a well preserved condition.

Kreshover is receiving some heavy shipments of wild smilax and many big balls and weddings are close at hand. He has the sole agency in New York for Caldwell, the Woodsman Co. and for W. C. Smith, of Marion, N. C., the green sheet moss and leucothoe shipper; handling immense quantities of all these commodities every season.

Mr. Moore, of Moore, Hentz & Nash, has been a very busy man lately, and as the result of his work over eighty signatures have been secured to his petition to Thos. C. Platt, of the U. S. Express Company, for reduction of rates. It will be a case of "When Greek meets Greek" when Mr. Jno. N. May presents it to the "Easy Boss."

Mr. Moore says the secret of good prices is that "since Christmas not half the usual product in cut flowers has been shipped to the market" and he thinks the shortage likely to continue indefinitely.

February 3 the wedding of Reginald Vanderbilt and Miss Nielson will take place and elaborate decorations have been provided for. Rumor says over 100,000 violets alone have been ordered for the occasion. Another week it will be possible to announce the name of the fortunate florist who has corraled this plum, and it will be a "fat" one.

It was an unique "dinner" given by Henry Siebrecht, Jr., of Siebrecht & Son, January 4, to the firm's "old clerks" and stenographer. Fourteen sat down to the handsomely decorated table, Lawson carnations being used. The dishes were entirely horticultural. The salt was in 1-inch fern pots, 2-inch pots held the cocktails, and 3-inch the oyster dittos. The claret was in 4-inch pots—for a short time—6-inch saucers held the pickles and olives. The menu was written on birch bark and placed on an easel of stemming sticks. Ice cream in 6-inch saucers. Finger bowls of 6-inch half-pots with saucers to match. Cigars and cigarettes in 6 and 3-inch pots. A visit to the conservatories in the big delivery wagon proved a digestive influence and with cheers for the fair hostess, Mrs. Siebrecht, Jr., the happy party voted the occasion a red letter day.

It is a comfort to know in these days of coal shortage that in some respects "horticulture" is not restricted. John Darcy, head gardener for the Andrew Moloney estate at Spring Lake, N. Y., found triplets in his New Year's stocking. John had thirteen children before this Santa Claus surprise, so the "hoo doo" is lifted and the business Adam originated takes its proper place at the "head of the procession."

On January 13 the Greek element had "Christmas" thirteen days behind the "regular." Do you know there are 10,000 of the Greek faith in New York City, and I don't know how many are selling flowers. Some of them on every prominent street corner, and a few of them with handsome stores and doing a fine legitimate business. Their churches were profusely decorated for the festive day.

The annual smoker of the Morris County Gardeners' Association was held this Wednesday evening, January 14, at Madison, N. J., and as usual a "full house" greeted the society. Unfortunately for those who desired to be "in it" at both banquets, this and the one at Tarrytown, the old rule got in its work. "No two bodies can occupy the same space at the same time." However, telegraphic reports indicate a fine reunion, a large attendance and a constantly advancing society in numbers and prosperity.

The seriousness of the coal question is still paramount. There may be both calamities and tragedies to report before the solving of the problem.

The "Wagon Express" for cut flowers from Madison via Chatham, Summit and other centers, runs regularly and is proving a wonderful saving and convenience, while the practical lesson it is giving the express companies will surely bear fruit.

John A. Scollay, of Brooklyn, has just completed a 1,750 foot hot water boiler for Robert C. Bancroft, at Toughkenamon, Pa.

The new firm of Purdy Bros. is developing an extensive violet trade and has some fine growers and shippers on its list.

McManus' stock of orchids is always abundant and there are some fine specimens in his daily shipments. His out-of-town trade is growing constantly.

W. H. Gunther reports a tremendous inflow of violets last week, with prices for all but the best away below the average.

Red tulips are in evidence at Saltford's and Chas. Millang's conservatory is again filled with palms and ferns for his wholesale customers.

J. Austin Shaw.

Various Items.

Trade inclined to be quiet, and goods scarce. If there has been any surplus at all lately it has been in the matter of poorer qualities of colored carnations. Violets are not so scarce as they were and prices therefor have accommodated themselves to the new situation. Roses are particularly scarce, but the advent of tulips helps out that situation.

Severe colds, and more serious conditions arising from them, are plentiful, but Mr. Additon, who has been most dangerously afflicted that way, is now considered out of danger and rapidly improving.

One of the oldest and most respected gardeners, Mr. F. L. Harris, for about forty years head gardener for H. H. Hunnewell, of Wellesley, has lately died. As the gentleman was about eighty years of age, that is presumed to be the chief cause of his death.

A moment's run on business through Mr. Elliott's houses at Brighton shows them to be in their usual business-like trim, with Brides and Maids now off crop, but seemingly very soon to come in heavily like everyone else's. The Kaiserins and Carnots in full rest and the Jacques just waking from their long sleep make an interesting exhibit, and his arrangement for applying liquid manure by gravity pressure is worth a long trip to see. The mammoth asparagus houses never looked better and his Sprengeri is showing a surprising growth of branches just ripening.

Mr. Thomas Carter, foreman of the Exeter Rose Conservatories, Exeter, N. H., has been visiting among our rose growers and reports a pleasant and profitable trip. His hosts while here also express pleasure derived from his visit.

OBITUARY.

Claudius M. Ravier.

Claudius M. Ravier, Mobile, Ala., the pioneer florist and nurseryman of Alabama, died January 9.

He was born in France and was educated as a gardener and was a student at the Botanical Gardens of Paris. After completing his studies he spent some time in England, doing landscape work and later emigrated to America, spending some time in New York and Rochester, and in 1869 reaching New Orleans, where he engaged in business as a florist.

He married in 1875 and the same year removed to Mobile, where he started in the business at the present location, and where he has remained ever since and where he had developed a large business. Starting at first in a small way he eventually had four acres of land and 50,000 feet of glass.

He was always prominent at the various exhibitions and received many high awards for his various exhibits which were always of fine quality.

He is survived by his wife and three sons—Louis, Fred and Claude—and one daughter.

Seed Trade News.

Philadelphia.—About all the seed houses here have been very busy mailing catalogues for the past ten days. Messrs. W. Atlee Burpee & Co. have introduced an innovation in stamping their catalogue wrappers. The stamps are bought at the post office in the usual way, and are cancelled in the original sheets by the post office department before they leave the building, the stamps are then affixed to the wrappers as usual, the catalogues are placed in U. S. mail bags, each state being kept separate, the bags being properly labeled for each state, and are hauled direct to the railroad station, all of which is done under the supervision of a postal employe who is stationed at the establishment during mailing hours. This plan not only precludes the possibility of stamp peculation by those handling the stamps, but it also insures greater dispatch in handling and forwarding the catalogues to their destination; on an average from six to ten hours' time is gained in getting the catalogues to customers. The mail trade promises to be very satisfactory for the present. The receipts of one house are 400 per cent greater than this time last year. There is already great activity in placing contracts for 1903 crops among the growers in this section, and as a consequence they are much elated over their prospects for large acreages at good prices. The catalogue of Henry A. Dreer Corporation is a beauty; in it they excell all previous efforts; it requires 7c to mail it. Nearly all other seed catalogues issued here show big improvements over last season. The price of White Spine cucumber varies greatly; some list it at $1.25 and others at $2.50 per pound in their retail lists.

DES MOINES, IOWA.—The Pease Garden and Nursery Co. are rebuilding and expect to be sufficiently recovered from their serious fire in October to handle their usual spring business. The past season was a poor one for seed crops in this section and prices will rule higher. Indications point to a good trade the coming season, and a slight increase in acreage for seed crops.

MANITOWOC, WIS.—The Manitowoc Seed Co. has been incorporated with a capital stock of $20,000. The incorporators are Albert Guttman, Geo. L. Born and Gustav E. Alter. Fire did $100 damage at the establishment of the Madson Seed Co. Jan. 2. It was due to a gas explosion and there was a panic among the employes, but all escaped without injury.

MESSRS. W. W. BARNARD & CO., Chicago, who were unfortunate enough to lose many catalogue electrotypes in a fire at their printer's, happened to have good page proofs of many of the pages of their new catalogue and by having these photo-engraved, will be enabled to get out their catalogue with but little delay.

ST. PAUL.—Recent callers were W. H. Small, of Evansville, Ind., and W. H. Grenell and A. T. Ferrell, of Saginaw, Mich. Foreign shipments are now arriving quite freely and there is great activity in shipping early orders. L. L. May & Co. have issued their catalogue and are mailing it to their customers.

THE Livingston Seed Co., Columbus, Ohio, says: "We are more and more convinced of the scarcity of the best grade of tomato seed, especially of canners' sorts. Very few offers from the back door of canneries is a feature of this season. Higher prices will likely be necessary soon."

HARRY N. HAMMOND, of Bay City, Mich., is in Chicago arranging for his catalogue printing, which work was originally in the hands of The Review & Herald Publishing Co., Battle Creek, Mich., whose plant was destroyed by fire.

ROCHESTER, MICH.—J. H. McCotter, who was for years superintendent of the Ferry seed farm, near Pontiac, Mich., will have charge of the new farm recently purchased by the Ferry Co., near this city.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—J. G. Peppard reports that his seed business of 1902 showed a gain of 20 per cent over that of 1901.

THE PERSONAL soliciting of orders among market gardeners about Chicago is now being pushed by the local seed houses.

CHAS. P. BRASLAN visited Chicago enroute for a short trip to the East.

ONION seed is being offered very low to onion set growers.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Holiday Trade.

There is a general expression of satisfaction over the results of the Christmas and New Year's trade, as all good stock was disposed of at the prevailing price of a year ago and with no "kick coming." Our retail stores were beautifully decorated with material suggestive of the festive season and with the latest novelties offered by the leading supply houses of the East. Christmas bells, fancy fern dishes and violet boxes, and baskets filled with flowering plants and trimmed with ribbon and crepe paper contributed largely to the decorative features and sold well.

Portland is a cut flower city and the sales in that line reached high-water mark, the public willingly paying the highest price for the best stock. Unfortunately for the local growers the atmospheric conditions (all rain and no sunshine) which prevail here in the winter months give the flowers that tired feeling, and carnations, roses and violets could only be had in limited supply. This deficiency, however, we overcame by importing heavily from the wholesale growers of San Francisco, where climatic conditions are just the reverse of ours. The distance from 'Frisco to Portland is only thirty-six hours ride, and when proper care is exercised by the express company, stock reaches us in an excellent condition.

George Atten made a run on primrose plants, disposing of 500 at from 50 cents to $1 each.

Miss Rose Pfunder displayed her usual skill in arranging of new "effects," which took well with her patrons.

Martin & Forbes report a satisfactory increase over last year, and their Brides, Maids and Beauties were in good crop at the right time.

From their establishment at Oakland, Cal., Clarke Bros. received several shipments of grand carnations, Estelle. Crocker and Lawson, retailing at $2 per dozen. As fine a lot of chrysanthemums as were ever seen by the retailer were 700 blooms grown at the home plant for the Christmas trade. They were "gems" and a credit to Frank Clarke, who grew them. They sold like hot cakes in zero weather, the last bringing as high as $10 per dozen.

The "green goods" business is done on a small scale here, but at large figures. None other but native-grown material is used. The English holly thrives to perfection in Oregon and commands a fancy price. Holly wreaths sold for $1.50 to $3 each. Some were shipped as far east as New York City. A few rare specimen trees are seen growing on our lawns and the faithful "bull dog" was obliged to do day and night duty to protect the trees from vandalism. Another useful foliage used here for decorative purposes is the berberis, more commonly called Oregon grape. Oregon mistletoe was beautifully berried and equally as good as the Texas grown.

Monday opened the week with a rapidly falling thermometer and a promise of pretty close to zero weather. All good flowers are scarce, with the exception of violets, and in a few cases specials have gone above even the high rates quoted above for roses. The supply is insufficient to meet demand and the outlook for any great increase in the future is not encouraging.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

In compliance with an appeal from local members of the society and by and with the advice and consent of President Burton, a meeting of flower shippers and others directly affected is called at 9 o'clock a. m., Saturday, January 17, at the American House, Boston, to consider the unwarranted and oppressive advance in express charges upon cut flower shipments and to take such action in the premises, under the auspices of the National Society, as may be necessary for the protection of the cut-flower industry. All flower growers and dealers are cordially invited, whether or not members of the S. A. F.

Our Growers are greatly pleased. Will other Growers give us a trial?

The Market.

Zero weather is prevailing and our weather man promises no change for the present. Sunday and Monday the thermometer registered 10 to 12 below zero, accompanied by a brisk wind. The days, however, remain bright, and the supply of stock is on the increase.

Roses are somewhat firm in price, but carnations have eased up and prices are on the decline. Violets are coming in freely, but the cold weather affects the sale of them. Sweet peas are coming in more plentiful and find a ready market. Stevia is on the wane, and about another week's cut will end a profitable season for the growers of this flower. Romans and paper whites are coming in freely, with a fair demand. Smilax is scarce, but other greens are plentiful. Current prices will be found in the regular market columns.

Items.

The coal question is the burning question of the day. Local papers are daily publishing reports of advance in price, of extreme shortage and possible famine, but up to the present time plenty of bituminous coal could be had, at a somewhat advanced price, however. The shortage of coal has in some ways taught the florists a lesson about the fuel question. It has caused economy in firing, and more time was given to the merits of the various grades of fuel. Many who presumed they could get along only with a particular brand of coal, found themselves with money ahead and results equally satisfactory by the compulsory method to "take what you can get today." Many of our brethren, in the northern part of the state, are burning wood, which can be had at low figures.

The recent rise in express rates on cut flowers is extortion and detrimental to our business. In an interview with a superintendent of one of the companies here, it was stated that this action was due to loss to the companies in handling cut flowers. Has any one ever collected a claim, without persistent pressing of the claim to which he was justly entitled? There is a very small percentage of claims paid by the express companies, and surely not enough to make up for the present shrinkage in shipping, owing to the high rate. When claims are paid, they are usually taken out of the pockets of some express driver or clerk who may perhaps be responsible for the entry of the claim; but they in turn derive no benefit from the advanced rate. It all comes out of the florists' coffers and will continue so as long as we submit to the dictations of monopoly. United action is necessary and it is hoped that the Society of American Florists will, in some way, cope with this question successfully.

There is no time like the present, when organized effort is necessary. If you are not a member of the S. A. F., get under its wings at once, and take a hand in this matter, for in "nity there is strength."

The Milwaukee Florists' club will hold its regular meeting Thursday evening, January 15. Preliminary matters pertaining to the next meeting of the S. A. F. will be taken up. An invitation was received from the St. Louis Florists' club, inviting the Milwaukee club to join the Chicago florists and pay them a visit. Action in the matter will be taken up at the next meeting. POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

A Banquet.

The Dutchess County Horticultural Society's banquet last Thursday evening was a great success. At the regular meeting of the society in the afternoon the following officers were re-elected: President, E. Lyman Brown; vice-president, W. J. Saltford; treasurer, Chas. Mitchell; secretary, N. Harold Cottam. The present membership numbers 312, a sufficient evidence of its prosperity. The antagonism to excessive express rates is rampant here and a committee has been appointed to reason in person with the American express officials. The addition made to the regular rates December 1 was 50 per cent.

The best citizens of Poughkeepsie are members of the Dutchess County Society—assemblymen, lawyers, doctors, gardeners and many millionaires—among them such well known names as F. W. Vanderbilt, Levi P. Morton, Ogden Mills, C. F. Dietrich and Wm. B. Dinsmore. The menu of the banquet was "high grade," and some would call it "fancy." The list of speakers included President Roosevelt, Grover Cleveland, Governor Odell and Judge Parker, and the ingenious letters of excuse from these gentlemen for inability to attend were witty and appropriate.

Frank Hasbrouk was the toastmaster, and a good one. He quoted from Roosevelt: "Strenuous regrets," "shooting big game," "strained tendon," "riding two horses on the trust question," etc. Cleveland reported "the Monroe doctrine," "in a condition of inocuous desuetude," "deep regrets"—"impossible to get leave of absence from President of Princeton College"—"had to give a lecture to the students" and "yours perennially." Governor Odell reported "acceptance of invitation, but had been so busy writing annual message also that the two speeches were mixed up and sent wrong by his typewriter, and that he had so much work ahead to keep the bolters in line he begged to be excused." Judge Parker telegraphed he had a letter of acceptance written but held it back, thought it was next Thursday, and asked that the dinner be postponed, etc.

Then Attorney Frank B. Lown assumed the toastmaster's duties. His Biblical comparisons were very humorous, and his references to the "job lot of speaking material," the society was obliged to "gather in from the highways and byways" because of the absence of the great men expected, were very humorous.

He introduced the first speaker, Honorable A. Lee Wager, of Rhinebeck, as "wise, good, modest, not beautiful, but the author of 'Beautiful Snow!'" He kept the company in a continuous roar. His wit was original and spontaneous. It was the speech of the evening. To hear extracts from it can give no idea of its eloquence. Richard Connell, the editor of the News-Press, was the second speaker, and was loaded to the brim with Washington and Rip Van Winkle stories, closing with an eloquent peroration on the beauty of the rose, the spotless lily and the inevitable law that makes us all "sweet slaves of sweet perfection."

Deputy Attorney General Wood gave a short, profound, humorous and wise address on "Farm Mortgages," and President E. Lyman Brown, of the New York State Hospital, waxed eloquent as substitute for Judge Parker. The toastmaster introduced him as the "champion fruit gatherer," referring to the one hundred members secured by him in a single day, and every one a peach! Mr. Brown gave some interesting data as to the society, its large membership and successful fall exhibitions. John J. Platt, editor of the Poughkeepsie Eagle, closed the evening with a most interesting historical speech concerning the ratification of the Union and the constitution, declaring that the first salute ever fired to the "United States of America" was on Market street, Poughkeepsie. The patriotism and enthusiasm of the banqueters were aroused by the stirring references to the glory of the old days, when almost from the very spot whereon he stood the cannon's mouth sent forth the voice of the nation's birth!

Old-timers told me it was the best banquet of the society and it was certainly most creditable and enjoyable to all who attended.

Items.

W. G. Saltford, of 288 Main street, is the leading florist of the city, his handsome retail department being in charge of his sons, George and Arthur, which accounts for much of the Vassar College trade. Mr. Saltford's residence and range of 30,000 square feet of glass are on the banks of the Hudson, about a mile from the center of the city. The entire output is handled by the retail store, with the exception of the violets, which are shipped to Mr. Saltford's brother, Mr. George Saltford, the wholesaler of West Twenty-ninth street, New York. The residence commands a charming view of the Hudson and the Catskill Mountains. Vassar College is close at hand, with its 1,000 young ladies, which, when the commencements and dances arrive, brings the chappies from all over the country and depletes the flower supply in a jiffy. Mr. Saltford gets many an order from brother florists all over the land when the "sweet girl graduates" leave their alma mater and receive their diplomas.

In 1905 he will place his new carnation, "Fair Harvard," on the market, a wonderfully strong grower, often 3½ inches in size, and like the Gen. Jack rose, a counterpart of the Harvard College colors.

Poughkeepsie has three other florists within its borders, who do a fine trade—Lynch, Fricker and the Haggerty Floral Co. It is a beautiful city of 35,000 inhabitants, delightfully situated on the Hudson, high and dry, with glorious views, grand estates, rich in Revolutionary remembrances, and boasting possession of one of the finest bridges in the world. But its horticultural and agricultural achievements make it pre-eminently interesting to the florists of this country, and its "Society" is a credit to the county and a lesson to the country in the line of what harmony and co-operation can accomplish.

ALBANY, N. Y.

The holiday business here was excellent. Everyone sold out clean; in fact, couldn't get enough stock to supply the demand without sending to New York.

Menand sold everything he had and could have sold twice as much more if he had had it.

Gloeckner never did such a large business before, especially in funeral work—simply couldn't get enough flowers. Holly didn't go very well here at the cemetery on account of the snow on the ground.

Danker did a tremendous business. Had a great run on pot plants, especially ardisias and begonias. He had a fine lot, too.

Wm. King did twice the business he did last year, and could have done four times as much could he have got the stuff.

Eyres, Whittle Bros. and Goldring all did a fine business. All report a lot of funeral work mixed in with regular cut flower and plant trade.

Sambrook & Son, Troy, also did a very large business, and had roses and carnations been more plentiful could have done much more.

So all of us have to be satisfied with what we did do and say "if" until another Christmas and New Year.

ASPHALTUM ON PIPES.

Is there anything that will remove asphaltum from hot water pipes? P.

There are only two practical ways to remove the asphaltum from the pipes at this time. One is to scrub it off with a steel wire scrubbing brush or scrape it with an old file; the other is to choose a bright morning when the ventilators can be thrown wide open and then fire to "beat the band" and so burn it off.
